DR. ROBERT SHARP.

This, the Ninth Tulane Annual,

is respectfully dedicated to

ROBERT SHARP,

Professor of English in the University.

Dr. Robert Sharp.

ROBERT SHARP is a native of Brunswick County, Virginia. His parents were Richard Henry Sharp and Lucy Hardy Sharp. They were of that fine old English stock which has done so much for Virginia and for the whole nation.

He went to Randolph-Macon College, where he graduated with high honors. He received his degree of Master of Arts there also, in 1876. Dr. Sharp determined to continue his studies, and so he went to Leipzig, where he received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in 1879. In 1881, at Spartanburg, South Carolina, he married Blanche Herndon.

The year after he left Leipzig, Dr. Sharp was appointed to the Chair of English in the University of Louisiana, which, four years later, was changed to Tulane University. For almost twenty-five years Dr. Sharp has devoted his best efforts to the students of Tulane, and there are a large number of them who will attest his refining influence.

While Dr. Sharp has been devoting his main energies to his class-room, he has still found time to do some outside work. All his writings are noted for their deep and careful scholarship, as of course we know they would be, if they are Dr. Sharp's. His style is simple and direct, but with unusual clearness and faithfulness to the exact shade of thought. He has edited the Beowulf, the great Anglo-Saxon epic, and the Fight at Finsburgh (with Prof. James H. Harrison). His edition of the Beowulf was a notable one, and has been praised by scholars; among them, Mr. Jusserand in his latest work. This edition of the Beowulf is still used in Oxford, although several other editions have been published since. Recently, Dr. Sharp has been the editor of Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, a book noted for its accurate and painstaking scholarship. Besides this, he wrote the articles on Anglo-Saxon and Demosthenes in Warner's Library of the World's Best Literature.

As a teacher, Dr. Sharp has an unusual influence over his students. He is a man of profound learning, though on account of his modesty it usually takes us some time to find it out. He is open-minded and fair, willing to see and consider our way of looking at a subject. He never gives up a boy, believing there is ability and good in every one somewhere; and by his sympathy and helpfulness, he usually brings this good. He so genuinely cares for our success that he seems more an adviser and friend than an instructor. We feel ashamed not to try and besides we want to do our duty anyhow. The result is, as everyone who has been taught by Dr. Sharp will tell you, that he succeeds in giving to his students in some degree his own enthusiasm and fine feeling for literature and scholarship.

Dr. Sharp also influences his students in another way,—by his personality, by his character. He is so conscientious and sincere; he does not spare himself when he sees his duty. No person can be with him for any length of time without realizing how much truth and honor mean to him. He is always courteous and thoughtful of others. "Politeness," he says, "is an attitude of heart," and it certainly is in his own case. He is courteous because it is his nature, because he has a kind heart.

The students see all this and it has its effect. We may sum his influence by saying that Dr. Sharp is a scholar, and, in the fullest and truest sense of the word, he is our ideal of what it really means to be a gentleman.

Senior Class History.

AND NOW the time has come when we must leave you. Come gather round, ye bands of rude, unpolished underclassmen! Ye Freshmen of the shamrock hue! Ye creepy Sophomores! Ye sleepy Juniors! It is the last time you shall hear this voice that alone had the power to waken some spark within your sluggish natures. By years of patient striving, we have tried to teach you the way of life; to impart to you that knowledge, the secret of our power to run this joint. The imprint of these untiring efforts, it remains for time to show.

But now, in this, our sad farewell—sad, indeed, for doth not even the lobster breeder, in time, conceive a sort of attachment for the lobster, in the raising of which he has spent a lifetime (I might have rung in the one about the mother and the deformed child, but didn't think it quite appropriate)—in this, our sad farewell, we would once more impress upon you those maxims of virtue that we have tried to instill into you.

We would first recall to your minds those deeds of greatness and valor that have marked the course of our life among you, from the day we chastised the arrogant nineteen-threes to the present noon of our greatness. Our French and Physics exploits, while yet in the early morning of our life; our table-tricks, and tombstone stunts! Nor would we have you forget those among us whose greatness will still remain when they are gone, as an inspiration to the ardent youth among you. Many, the Loafer; Robertson, the Silent; Westfeldt, the Sedate; Woodville, the Virtuous; Leake, the Lulu; Hart, the Haughty; Kostmayer, the Organ Grinder; Schwartz, the Short; Riess, the Ready; Barnes, the Bluff!!! Such are the names we leave behind us.

Neglect not the good and holy books we leave as monuments behind us. In them, you will learn the Wisdom of Life. They reveal the inmost souls of their august and noble authors. "How I Got It," by William Leake; "Confessions of an 'Omega Oil' Fiend," by Frank Hart; "Around the Track in 1:38 4-5," or, "How to Beat the Ponies," by Warren Woodville; "Legitimate Speculation," by John Riess; "Three Feathers, a Comic Opera in Six Acts, and One Dry Martini," by Gustaf Rhinehold Westfeldt; "Poetic Works," of Yeremya Smith (this is indeed a monument). I quote but one immortal line: "Ah! the trickster!! But he fixed her!!" What an easy, pleasing freedom from conventionality!

And now, emotion overcomes me!! I will close in the immortal words of Shakespeare:

"Love thyself last; cherish those hearts that hate thee;
Corruption wins not more than honesty.
Still in thy right hand, carry gentle peace
To silence envious tongues. Be just and fear not;
Let all the ends thou aimst at, be thy Country's,
Thy God's, and Truth's; then, if thou fallest, O Cromwell,
Thou fallest a blessed Martyr! Serve the king!"

And don't tease Dicky Bruff.

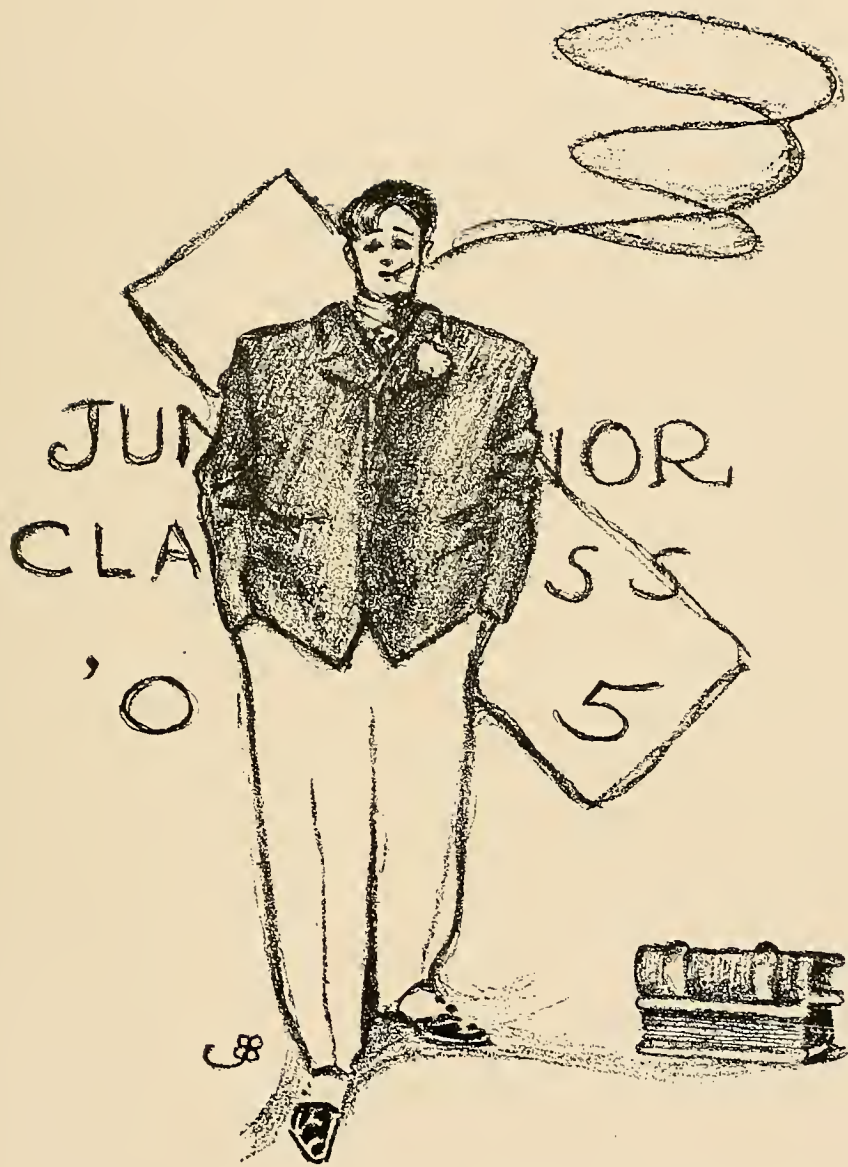

HISTORIAN.

Class History.

IT IS the custom for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes to praise themselves to their utmost ability in the histories of their Classes. Now, whether these two classes have not reached the point where they are convinced that there are still things to be learned, or whether it is just simply for the love of boastfulness, cannot easily be ascertained, but the former seems more plausible. At any rate, when the Junior Class is reached, this self-praise, and love to push oneself forward, vanishes, and as it would seem too much like boastfulness to give all of the great deeds of the Junior Class, the writer will not give a great, long, flowery "rigmarole," but just state a few plain facts in as simple language as possible: that's all.

Vacation having come, and gone, the dignity of Juniors is now maintained. We have left behind to the lower classmen those nonsensical tricks, such as "cutting," "matching," and the like, to occupy a higher position, and now we only entertain such thoughts as will help us to a higher plane of usefulness and advancement. The Faculty, seeing that there were going to be so many "Summa Cum Laude" made, and fearing that the whole Class would be graduated with distinction when the renowned year of 1905 came, decided to raise the standard of the University in order to hold it down. Even with this great change they find it difficult to keep the Juniors from passing the "Summa Cum Laude" limit.

A Class in Physics was never known that could outstrip the present one, and "the Class in Organic Chemistry is just simply It," said "Carboxyl," in an interview with a newspaper reporter.

Who is it that wins the debates, the medals for oratory? Is it the Freshmen, Sophomores, or Seniors? Not much; it is the Juniors. Not only does the Class of 1905 excel in debate, but it also shares a greater part of the honors in the football field. Actions speak louder than words; therefore the actions of the Juniors in this past football season need not be here enumerated, as they are perfectly familiar to everyone.

The decrease in numbers of 1905 since its entrance into the University is something astounding. Though a great many of our men that have withdrawn are still pursuing their studies in other Universities, still a larger percentage that have gone from under the watchful care of the dear old "Scarlet and Black" are now struggling for an upright and honest share of this world's goods. Our prayers and good wishes go out with them, but we only wish that they had struggled along with us until the great year of 1905, in which all of us would have been turned out into the world to begin at the same time the great battle of life.

Sophomore History.

The Herald cries:

Hear, oh, hear, ye peoples of all sizes, shapes and kinds! Hear, oh, hear, ye lame and halt! Ye blind and decrepit! Hark ye while I tell ye the great and wondrous deeds done by the great and wondrous Class of 1906 of Tulane University! Hark ye, one and all, large and small, hark ye!

The Crowd answers:

And what, oh most high and mighty Herald, has this Class, of whom ye speak, done worthy of note?

The Herald replies:

Listen then and I will tell ye. Once there was a most extraordinary set of men who gathered together from all parts of the country in the search for knowledge. A great, though albeit mixed crew were they. Though they may have lacked some few of the unessential qualities of the gods, they possessed all the attributes of true greatness.

The Crowd:

Hear, oh, hear!

The Herald:

And they assembled together in Tulane University and called themselves the CLASS OF 1906. A most original body were they. With their advent came life and vigor into the University proper. College and class spirit they brought galore. As players of the game of the gods, football, they were unexcelled. Nothing could stop them. And when they entered the field of baseball again were they champions.

The Crowd (awe-stricken):

Great indeed were they.

The Herald:

Now there came a time in their history when they reached the second year of their official life. And with that time there also came a set of presumptuous youngsters who took unto themselves as a name, 1907. Hear, oh, hear! Now listen ye. It became the duty of this great and noble Sophomore Class to punish these offenders. And this they set out to do both on the athletic field and otherwise. Therefore there was held a cane rush. Then were these Freshmen fearful and trembling. They gave way before the terrible onslaught of their elders as a reed gives before a hurricane. One indeed of their number was so badly hurt that his life was despaired of. Straightway, scattered to the four winds by their defeat, these terrified youths abolished the long-standing annual cane rush and substituted therefor an annual test of milk drinking. Great, oh, ye multitudes, great is the Class of 1906.

The Crowd:

Great, oh Herald, great is the Class of 1906.

The Herald:

Now hark ye well, ye peoples of various kinds, for my tale draws to a close. These children of the devil were not entirely crushed, as had been thought they were. There was still life in the serpent. They even dared to form a football team, hoping thus to regain at least some of their former prestige. The Sophomores loved little the task of eternally crushing these pigmies. No glory came therefrom. But it had to be done, nevertheless. Great, oh, great is the Class of 1906. Now this time it was decided to most effectually down these imps. From one end of the field to the other were the scared representatives of the younger class driven. Finally, when the game ended with an overwhelming defeat for the youngsters, the latter slunk away in darkness, while 1906, triumphant, carried off all the honors of the day. Listen, all ye peoples, oh, listen. From that day unto this, of neither hair nor hide of these venturesome youths has it been heard. They were most truly quieted. Great, oh peoples, great is the CLASS OF 1906.

The Crowd (dispersing):

Great indeed, great is this high and mighty class.

History of the Class of 1907.

HURSDAY, October 1, was a memorable day for Tulane, for on that day the illustrious Class of 1907 entered. Even the redoubtable Secretary was filled with amazement at the vast numbers and bulky wads of the Freshmen.

At first our Class wandered around with rather lost expressions, which only brightened at the prospect of a struggle in the hall or on the campus. This brightness reached its climax when numerous Sophomores who had usurped the Freshmen's time-honored color, painted 1906 on the backstop of the baseball field. We now felt quite at home. Warfare is our natural element. Class spirit arose, and, forming in a compact body, we rushed upon the Sophomores and rolled them in the mud. Then, leaving one Freshman to guard the whole class, we seized upon boards for battering-rams and smote the name of 1906 from the earth. On the way back to Gibson Hall we threw several of each other into the pond, which is now filled up on account of an earnest petition from the Sophomores. After this, their first defeat, the Sophomores were much more respectful, but still had the impudence to issue a proclamation to the Freshmen, to which no one paid any attention.

At the cane rush, in the face of vastly superior numbers, we were beaten by only two hands. This slight defeat is equivalent to a victory, because we had no organization, and had elected our President, Rugan, but five minutes before the rush. Our next evidence of superiority was the painting of the windmill. This is a feat which has never been achieved before, and the nearest approach to it was the feeble painting of the tank, but this is not worthy of notice. Some of the Freshmen did this deed in spite of the proximity of the dormitory, and the next morning the sun showed to the astonished onlookers at Gibson Hall the beautiful spectacle of the windmill revolving merrily with its blades painted alternately black and gold, the Freshman colors!

The Sophomores were filled with envy, and the next night covered the blades with tar, but feared to paint them in their own colors.

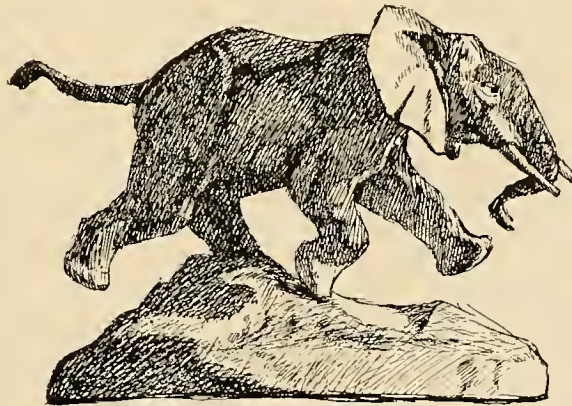

We lost the class football team game, but only because of the superior weight of our opponents. Several of the 'Varsity players were in the opposing team. In baseball it is universally acknowledged that the Sophs have no chance against us, and we shall doubtless retrieve our defeat on the gridiron by numerous victories on the diamond. Our husky team is determined to win.

If you went to Tulane Night there is no need to tell you of our overwhelming success. Several of our Class took two of the pit boxes, and stretched between them a wire and sent out the Class colors stretched on a box. From the rising of the curtain to the falling of the same the Freshmen were in constant evidence. Queen Lilly, Doctor Fizz, the Indian, and the whole chorus were sworn adherents of our Class, and the pathetic efforts of the Sophomores to show themselves only accentuated our success. Never before in the history of Tulane Night has one Class so outshone another. This not only shows intellectual superiority, but also shows a Tulane-like diplomatic ability.

Lastly, we wish to relate a characteristic act of the Sophomores. Of course, they have not violated any of our Tulane Night ordinances, but they have, with puerile ingenuity, painted '07 on one of their number, and have taken a photograph of themselves in threatening attitudes to the pseudo Freshman. Beware of this photograph! Do not be deluded by this babyish prank, and recognize the absurdity of any of the illustrious Class of 1907 being chastised.

Glück auf!

RIENDS! FACULTY! AND COLLEGIATES!

"Hear me for my cause, and be silent, that you may hear" the glorious history of "1904"!

Believe me for my veracity, and have respect for my veracity, for I am the Historian of "1904." If there is any one so ignorant that he doesn't know it, to him will I say that "1904 is the greatest class at Newcomb." If he ask why, this is my answer: May a ray of light from the brilliance from the Class of 1904 penetrate the dull gloom of his ignorance!

In order that it may, let him hear the correct answers to the questions recently asked by the Professor of History, in examination, as the most important facts of present times:

1. What modern institution is a veritable ancient Rome of art, culture, and wisdom? NEWCOMB COLLEGE.
2. Who made Rome howl? 1904.
3. About what was Rome howling? 1904.
4. Whose voice is most impressive in the Assembly Hall? 1904's.
5. Who has reached the "hall-mark" of authority? 1904.
6. Who had the special privilege of a presidential lecture? 1904.
7. Who is furnishing the poet and prose laureate of the 20th century? 1904.
8. Whose birthday is frequently celebrated in the French Class? 1904's.
9. About whom would Ben Jonson not have said, "they had little Latin, and less Greek? 1904.
10. Who is the pillow of German? 1904.
11. Who writes model German essays? 1904.
12. Who has learned the art of building "castles in Spain" with the stones brought by the Spanish Professor from his "swate native land"? 1904.
13. Who gave the Professor of Philosophy a real sensation of pleasure-pain? 1904.
14. Who penetrated the region of "Withinness" and "Withoutness," and discovered the "Isness" and "Thereness"? 1904.
15. Whose glory on the Basket-ball field is inexpressible? 1904's.
16. Who are the greatest fighters, at home and abroad? 1904.
17. What is Newcomb going to exhibit at the St. Louis Exposition? 1904.
18. Who's all right? We're all right!!—1904.

Who is there so base as to deny the poetic justice of these facts? If any, let him speak! Our greatness has deprived him of speech. Just as the Romans squelched Caesar, so has 1904 squelched all ambitions.

The Historian need only add that 1904, which was "born great, has achieved greatness, and has had greatness thrust upon it," will rule forever and live forever with its golden fame always green in the memory of men, for:

"The Gold and Olive we are showing,
In fame and glory has been growing,
Till the world has heard of 1904."

'TIS like the passing of the Spring,
Whose dewy blossoms fall in endless sleep,
Whose sweetest birds their song no longer sing :
No tender grass, no tiny violets peep
With modest gaze from under their sunshade.
All, all in new-born graves are laid.

Yet should our tears o'erflow in unchecked showers?
Brings glad some summer no sweet recompense?
Does not the fruit replace the withered flowers?
Above the violets' grave hangs clusters dense
Of rosebuds, and the echo of the breeze
Of springtime whispers to the trees.

'Tis like the farewell at a soldier's camp
When comrades press each other's hand, and tears
Unbidden fill the eye, and a chill damp
Bedews the brow for friends, whom the first years
Together drew, seem in that parting hour
To deeply drink of sorrow's power.

In groups they watch their dearly cherished flag
That led through gain and loss to viet'ry's end.
Creep slowly down the staff,—a tattered flag.
'Till loving hands so softly mend each rend.
And yet, why grieve, because its days are few?
The small flag 's merged into the new.

'Tis like the rising of the summer sun
That through a misty veil doth view the dawn,
That gleams so bright, and yet, ere he hath run
His upward course to noon from early morn
Perhaps a dark and heavy cloud his light
Will hide with cloak as dark as night.

Or yet at noon, the sun may brightly shine
And fill with glory all the dismal earth,
So welcome Summer, needless to repine—
Cheer loudly for the great and timely birth
Of a new state, and pray a power divine
To keep unclouded Hope sublime.

CLASS POET.

THERE'S a sighing in the laughter,
There's a shadow on the sun,
There's a halting at the threshold
Now the weary task is done;
There's a hand that draws us backwards,
There's a voice that bids us wait,
And we turn us, and we listen,
Tho' the day is growing late.

Comrades, hearken,—you in cap and gown!
Throw a glance behind you, for the ghosts a'coming down.

There's the ghost of the beginning,
With its pretty, timid smile,
And the ghost of days that followed
Takes the second place in file;
And the ghost that's taller, fairer,
Sweeter, wiser,—it's the third,—
Reaches eager hands to clasp you,
But without a spoken word.

Comrades, hearken,—you in cap and gown!
Throw a glance behind you, for the ghosts a'coming down.

Oh, we waited, and we struggled,
And we wear the gown at last;
And it's good the strife is over,
And we're glad the waiting's past;
There are others close behind us,—
Wide and gaping swings the door,—
Yet we stop, and look, and listen—
Down the path we tread no more.

Comrades, hearken,—you in cap and gown!
Throw a glance behind you, for the ghosts a'coming down.

The History of 1905.

THE HISTORY OF 1905! What an extensive, important theme; for our feats and exploits are worthy of the pen of Homer, of Milton; therefore this poor scribe quakes at the thought of adequately describing the glories of this illustrious Class. It is no idle, school-girlish boast to assert that our progress through college for the past three years has been one long ovation, one succession of triumphs, since the hour when, as Freshmen, we toddled 'neath the classic shades of Newcomb, dimly realizing the mystic significance of our advent into the realm of knowledge, until now, when we are omniscient Juniors and the disciples and well-beloved of Minerva. All classes have acknowledged our superiority and have echoed our own words: "We are the first class in school."

Our escapades, achievements, and experiences have been queer and varied, but have always redounded credit upon us. But, above all, have we been foremost in athletic, and our fame on the basket-ball field is universal. Even now there is but a shadowy doubt in others' minds, not in ours, that we shall soon be victors in the contest for the Championship Cup. Then "1905" shall be engraved upon it, the symbol of all that is bright, noble, and sterling, and when our Senior year is ended the faculty and our fellow-students will give this final verdict: That Newcomb has been a better and a brighter place because in it we have lived.

Sophomore Class History.

IT IS almost useless to narrate the exploits, and sing the praises of the most brilliant Class Newcomb has ever seen. Does not everyone know them? If not, it is time for them to "read, mark, learn and inwardly digest" a few, only a few, of the achievements of the Class of 1906.

We were the most courageous Freshmen that ever stood on the Arcade steps on a bright October morning. Nothing could daunt us; not even the scornful glances of the Sophomores. They had no effect on us. In fact, we hardly noticed them. Everyone surely knows how we hid the Sophomores' books one Friday morning, and what a time the poor Sophs had to find them.

And then, our Class Play! What Freshman Class has presented the most successful Class Play? Why, 1906. And whose Class Night was the most brilliant last year? Whose but 1906. But it is useless to tell what is well known to all, and especially as language lacks words to chant our praise.

After a long vacation, we returned to College as Sophomores. We did not try to awe the poor little Freshies by our dignity, but we won their hearts from the first by our kindness. When we saw them standing around looking so woe-begone, we took pity on them, and made them feel perfectly at home by talking to them, and telling them of the nice time they were going to have soon.

Although we have lost our first game of basketball, that does not show that we cannot play. No, indeed. Before we get through, you will see our name adorning it, more than pearls or rubies.

We are already preparing for our Class Play, which, we promise everyone, will surpass our former success. We possess more histrionic talent than any class at Newcomb. This is shown by the fact that the merest whisper of a Class Night has gathered in our hall the largest crowd that has ever witnessed one of the famous Newcomb Class Plays.

These few things will serve to tell you how energetic, industrious, persevering and altogether brilliant we are. No more words are necessary, for we are

Freshman Class History.

THIS well known that those who praise themselves are liable to be accused of doing so because no one else will, and for this reason we, the Class of 1907, take great care never to boast of our achievements, because we would not give you the false impression that we are not admired and duly appreciated by all who have the good fortune to know us.

At first, and for only a very short while, we were not quite at our ease among our strange surroundings, but never for an instant did we allow this to be seen. The Sophomores have never made but one attempt to impose upon us, and then we triumphed by reason of our superior numbers. It was in the beginning of the year when they, finding a Freshman arranging her books in a locker on what they were pleased to call their side of the locker room, drove her away with scorn at her ignorance and presumption. But it was soon discovered that all lockers on the other side were taken and still many Freshmen were without any, whereas every Sophomore was well provided for, and yet many lockers on "their" side were ownerless. Under the circumstances they were forced to yield as gracefully as possible.

Indeed, ours is the largest class that has ever entered Newcomb, and, what is still better, it is composed of such girls that it will remain large during all the four years at College, and will be the wonder and admiration of all who shall behold it. At present we are so numerous that at any time of day a group of us may be seen in any part of the grounds or building.

The Faculty, who have the remembrance of another Freshman Class deeply impressed on their minds, have never recovered from their first surprise at us; surprise caused by the punctuality with which we always come to our classes and the ease and readiness with which we learn and recite our lessons.

Examinations have come and gone, but they rolled harmlessly from us, even as water from a duck's back, leaving no impression at all, unless it were a realization of our ability and a lessening of our dread for the finals.

Our Class Play will be such a triumph that—but, as I said before, we are not given to proclaiming our virtues from the housetop. You must come to see our Class Play and form your own opinion of it, and through it as a standard, your opinion of us.

1907.

Which is the greatest class at school,
The class that never breaks a rule,
The class that's ever calm and cool?
Why 1907!

Who gets ahead of the other classes,
Who comes on top with the Sophomore lasses,
Who, when "exams," come, always passes?
1907.

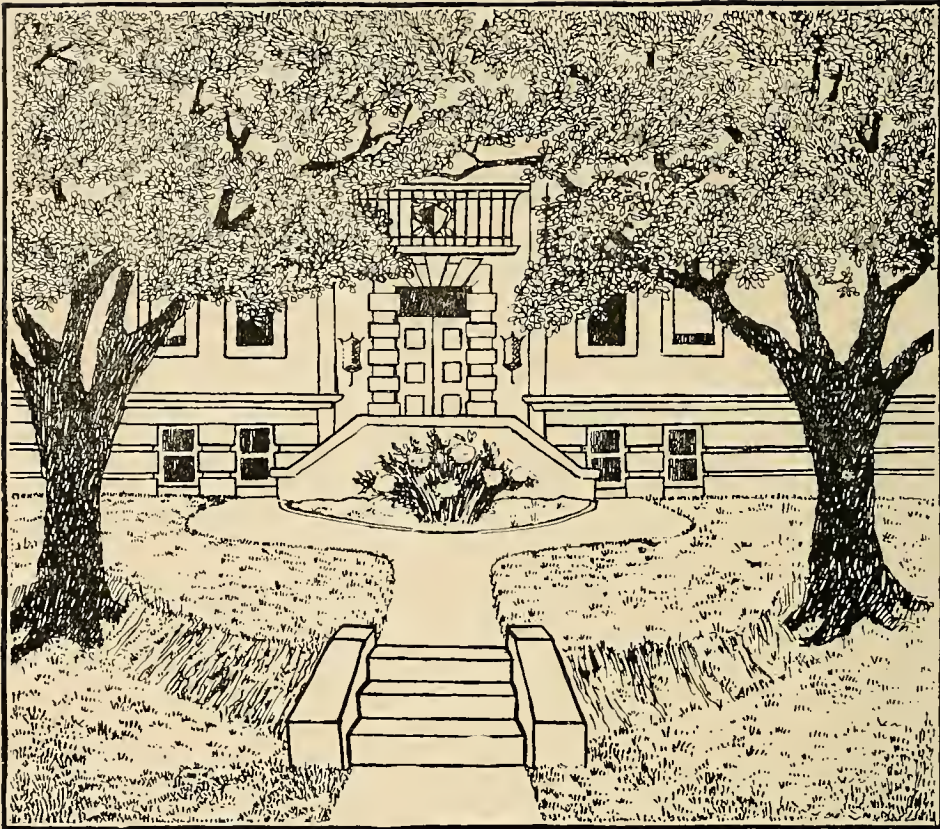

Who plays the very best basketball,
Who ever-ready obeys a call,
And comes in great numbers, one and all?
Why 1907!

Did you ever stop to think, friends dear,
Of the class that's always of good cheer—
The class that makes a record each year?
Of 1907.

Did you ever think of that class so good,
That could do great things if it only would,
That class that's always (mis) understood,
Of 1907.

Do you know that our colors are scarlet and black,
That courage and spirit we have, in fact,
That our great class is a "cracker-jack!"
Our 1907!

History of the Law Class.

THE LAW CLASS which assembled on the afternoon of November 19th was a body of calm, earnest, student-like seeming young men, from whom one might expect a session of singular and memorable interest and significance.

The opening lecture, delivered by Dean Hall, dealt with the essential qualities which a lawyer must possess, the high ethics of the legal profession and the splendid possibilities that it offered to the capable and deserving. The lecture, singularly interesting in itself, was memorable for its impressive fitness, and we believe that much of the salutary advice, so attractively embodied in the fine-filed phrases for which Mr. Hall is eminent, has lodged securely in the minds of many of the students and will long serve as a light to guide and an inspiration to spur them on to large achievements.

When the newness of the situation of being a law student and the confusion of introducing and being introduced to each other had passed, the class began to lay plans for an election of officers and to effect permanent organization. A hard fought campaign ensued, resulting in the election of Sturges Q. Adams, of Orleans, as President and his entire ticket. The officers merit many congratulations for winning from very worthy opponents. The intense struggle of the campaign developed some ill-feeling, but with the election, the victors, with Brutus-like magnanimity, buried all unkindness, and the attitude of the defeated candidate for the presidency and his lieutenants had all the grace and charm of victory.

It must be very apparent to all who have had experience in class matters that the best and largest facts of its history must needs be out of the reach and observation of the one deputed to write the story of the class. Could the historian but go to the rooms of each of the members of the class he would find, little doubt, in the short space of a six months' session events and achievements and triumphs that might crowd and distinguish years. But as this can not be done, we can judge only of these events by their large outlines, their successful results. But it takes no great power of synthesis to weave from these results a splendid fabric of single-minded devotion to high ideals and the severe requirements of the profession we have elected to adorn. The Quiz class, the theatre for the exhibition of these results, bears eloquent evidence of systematic and sustained hard work.

It must not be inferred, however, that there is not another side to the class. Like all truly great individuals and all great composite bodies of individuals, it is extremely versatile. It can turn from the contemplation of the tremendous seriousness of the Civil Code and Anson on Contracts to the physical delights of a picnic or hop with amazing suddenness. When the great fête day of the University, Founder's Day, came around none contributed more substantially to its success than the Law Department. It entered with interest and enthusiasm into the entertainments given by the other departments, and in the evening of the last day brought the celebration to a fitting close with a splendid dance, which will long linger in the minds of those who had the good fortune to be present as a most pleasing recollection.

As I write, the momentous question, to whom will fall the honor of representing the class as valedictorian on Commencement Night, occupies the attention of the whole class, and the high character of talent which has signified its intention of making the fight for that distinction, points to a very splendid forensic struggle.

The great official test as to what we have done has yet to come and must form another and perhaps portentous story. It is the earnest hope and belief of the historian that all will acquit themselves creditably, and if they do not satisfactorily satisfy the requirements of the learned professors, they have at least gained the respect and esteem of their comrades in arms, and this is by no means the worst test of their worth.

I have felt myself restricted at every turn in writing this account of the class. The very thorough report which has appeared weekly in the Olive and Blue has narrowed my sphere of action to a distressing extent. I dare not attempt to retell or to rearrange what seems to me so uniformly admirable. To those to whom an interest in the class has come, I recommend, with utmost confidence in the correctness of the facts and the charm of the narrative, the files of the Olive and Blue. To these records must the future historian revert when he wishes the inspiration of illustrious actions to spur and steady and sustain him for there they are most attractively embodied.

Extracts from the Law Lectures.

YOUNG gentlemen, it is important, for those who intend to become lawyers, to remember that doctors bury their mistakes. If you wish to have this fact vividly fixed in your brain, I invite you to visit any cemetery. (PROF. HALL.)

At the Common Law, the wife's personality is merged into that of her husband. (PROF. SAUNDERS.)

Impress it upon your minds, my young friends, that Justinian was a Christian. Unlike most men, he was passionately devoted to his wife Theodora. Had this great Roman law-giver been a Frenchman, we might call him a gens femme. (PROF. DENIS.)

To "Sentimental Mac," a Law Student.

Why do you write of "Lady" that you know;
Try to describe her grace in poem long,
The bliss of her sweet presence to prolong
To busy hours, when her you must forego
To fix your mind on legal subjects slow.
And try to find out where the Court was wrong,—
Thus carelessly leave tell-tale poem among
The pages of your Code, the place to show?
Believe me, boy, you know not what you write,
To have a girl your brain so badly crack,
That kiss from her puts you in such a plight
That men say truly, right behind your back,
"This man once had a beastly appetite,
But now, alas, he's "Sentimental Mac."

To "One Who Has Brown Eyes and Auburn Hair."

---

What is it that so stirs my very soul,
That seeks for utterance with all its might?
'Tis not a theme of music in whose flight,
Left but a few notes that I can control.
What is it that my mind doth so cajole,
That I desire, and yet care not to fight?
It cannot be that that cold marble white
Could stir but admiration?—'tis too droll!
But no, here is not where the mystery lies—
Music, no—nor sculpture—e'er has wrought
A feeling both of gladness and despair.
Why should it be so much of a surprise?
The source of all this tumult is the thought
Of one who has brown eyes and auburn hair.

History of the Forum.

ON NOVEMBER 23, 1900, the Forum Literary Society began its life, amid gloomy predictions of its own failure and that of the existing literary society,—Glendy Burke. It is needless to say that both of these pessimistic prognostications have not only failed to be verified, but that where before only about eight per cent. of the academic students took part in forensics, now from twenty-five to thirty per cent. are members of the organizations, and the rolls are steadily growing.

The advent of the Forum gave a stimulus to forensics at Tulane. Where before had been stagnation and woeful lack of interest, there began growth and activity, and a fine spirit of fraternal rivalry. Annual intersociety debates and oratorical contests were arranged, which have been characterized by high endeavors and marked excellence.

Though the years of its life are few, the Forum has achieved a goodly share of honors and distinctions. Of four intersociety debates, the Forum has won three, and likewise three of the four oratorical contests. The fourth debate was a tie, and there was no decision. The Forum has furnished men for the Tulane-Texas debates, and for the Gulf States Oratorical Contests. Few literary societies so young have such a splendid record.

Until recently, the Forum has had no domicile of its own; but in a few weeks it hopes formally to establish itself in the old Linton-Surget hall, which the University has kindly given for the purpose, and which it being beautified and furnished by means of funds contributed by the members of the society. The acquisition by the Forum of a permanent meeting hall is a decided step forward in its steady progress. Not only does it show to everyone that the Forum is a powerful factor in the University life, and that it has come to stay; but there is also engendered in the breast of every member of the society a desire, an ambition, to strive with all his might in the forensic contest, that this hall may be decorated with the rostra won.

The record of the Forum for the past year is especially brilliant. With the graduation of the class of 1903, departed the last of the original "Charter Members," the founders of the society, and the entire government and guidance of the Forum's destinies was entrusted to younger and less experienced men. Persistence of effort and steadfastness of purpose, however, have won for the society honors prouder even than those of the past; and if the horoscope is read aright, a brilliant and splendid future may be predicted for the Forum,—a career marked by worthy and illustrious achievement.

History.

"All great results come from small beginnings." If this rule holds good for the achievements of associations, the Y. W. C. A. of Newcomb College is destined to a glorious career.

The Newcomb Y. W. C. A. was founded in November, 1901, by a resolute band of eleven students, but the way in which they struggled and overcame difficulties proved that "not quantity but quality" is the ruling factor in this world. Three years have rolled by since the seeds of the Y. W. C. A. were sown at Newcomb. They have been years of labor, of mingled hope and disappointment, such as every young organization must endure: but the cause is too true a one to lack volunteers.

The purpose of the Y. W. C. A. is to help college girls to higher moral standards and more unselfish ideals, and to furnish an opportunity for spiritual inspiration in character development. To-day, the Y. W. C. A. of Newcomb has fifty-five members, and the roll call is steadily becoming longer. Such progress, however, must necessarily be slow, for its course is long and beset with difficulty. Let the watchword of Y. W. C. A., therefore, be "Labor," and let the members bear in mind that, as there is no royal road to learning, so there is, likewise, none to success, and it is by the old plebian path of rugged toil alone, that the Heights of Attainment are ever reached.

Sophomore Football Team.

THE HISTORY of the football team of the class of 1906 is but a history of a series of victories. Last year the total score was 55—5; this year it was 86—2.

Five games were played this season. The first two were practice games with the Boys' High School and Jesuits' College teams; the third was the overwhelming defeat of the Freshmen. The fourth and fifth games were with the town teams of Lake Charles and Franklin, La.

These teams were composed mainly of ex-college players, greatly outweighed the Sophomores, and each had a record of victories for the season.

The trip taken to play these games marks a new era in class football.

The Record of the Champion Team.

TO BE CANDID, we were anxious, if not worried, when we began our earnest work in athletics this season. For you see we are Juniors, and as such we had an exceptionally high mark to attain in team work in order to place this branch on a level with the rest of our course. But we are Juniors, as I said before, and we have but one watchword—Success.

Our life in the world of basket-ball is still a youthful one, but young as it is, it serves to prove, anew, the truth of the old adage, "Much in little"; and really, were we to enumerate all our honors and achievements the under-classes, in regard to the future, would be very much as the Seniors are, in regard to the present—disheartened. So I shall refrain from "crowing"; moreover, being a Junior myself, modesty prevents me from citing any but our two most famous victories.

On the 16th of January, in the fateful year of 1904 (as the sorrowful Sophomore will sadly testify), the Juniors played their first game for "the cup." It was a glorious contest from start to finish, and victory was indisputably (?) with 1905 from the moment the ball first left the hands of the referee. Did you ask for verification of my statement? If so, here it is: Score:—'05, 41; '06, 21. No more need be said; figures speak louder than words or Sophs after a defeat.

However, this victory was a preconceived fact, and merely served to inspire us with greater confidence for the event of the season—the game with the Seniors. If you want to learn the sad story you must hear it from the Seniors, for all we know is the happy side, how on March 7, 1904, Newcomb Campus was the scene of a contest which shall be memorable in the annals of basket-ball, as one of the prettiest games ever put up by a "cracker-jack" team against another, which had hoped to rank as such. The Junior team, lacking an essential member in its regular centre, met the entire Senior seven without a shade of doubt or fear. Encouraged by the cheers of their loyal sister-classes, everybody played her hardest and her best, and when the whistle sounded for the end of the last half, when the score board registered '05—49, '04—28, and when our coach appeared bearing the prize so greatly coveted, then indeed a shout of pride and triumph went up from the lips of every 1905 girl and her friend, and we felt that "our cup of joy was filled to overflowing. So there's no use talking, girls, whatever can be said of us is only the best, and we are proud to feel that the same position of honor which 1905 holds at Tulane, both in scholarship and athletics, its sister-class maintains with dignity and merit at Newcomb.

Three cheers for the Juniors! for, after all, it is the class that can't be beat.

To C. W. G.

FIRST sing our song together, girls, we'll sing it loud and clear;
Just sing it as we've sung it during all our Junior year;
Then give our yell with hearty will and three resounding cheers,
For remember that "Our Captain" is the best that Newcomb rears.

The History of a Sport.

ONCE UPON A TIME, in the ages long gone by, there lived somewhere below the Equator, and north of the South Pole, a young man by name of Forestville. For many years this youth had been sent to the Boys' High School in New Orleans to prepare him for his college life. Finally, after some diligent riding of ponies, and sundry other stunts, he was given a diploma, and went to Tulane to stir up the grey matter within his skull.

He entered Tulane in the fall of 1900, and a sweeter, purer, and more saint-like Freshman it would be impossible to imagine. But, alas and alack! more was to be stirred up in him than the aforementioned grey matter. This Freshman was a bright youth, and furthermore had winning ways when the faculty were about.

so without much trouble he passed—in the words of that august bunch, the faculty—"very credibly" through his Freshman and Sophomore years.

But with his Junior year came the desire to be a "sport." Forestville felt like kicking himself around over the verdant green of the campus for not evolving this great thought before, but thinking the great think that had been thought by a greater mind than his, that it is never too late to mend, forthwith resolved to turn over a new leaf, and be not only a sport, but one of the red-hot order. He gloated over this thought for quite a while, and altered its grammatical and rhetorical make-up many times before he decided that he had it in entirely logical order—then he gloated a week more and began the new era.

The day arrived for the beginning of his sportdom, and as the sun broke in on his sleeping face, he awoke with the feeling of impending greatness. He dressed himself scrupulously, taking much time in selecting his tie, and brushing the curl from his hair—"for," said he, "who ever heard of a curly-haired sport?" Then he went down to a restaurant known as the Cosmopolitan, ordered a glass of sterilized milk, smoked a cigarette, rubbed his feet on the sandy floor, spat twice in the spittoon, and got on a howling jag.

He had several classes that morning, but decided he was too full to go up-town until the afternoon. From ten to one he drank two sherry glasses of beer, a ginger ale, three celery tonics, and a couple of sarsaparillas. When he finally boarded a car for college he was wondering how long it would take him to break himself of the drinking habit. But this car, like all other cars, occasionally bumped, and by the time he reached Tulane his inside additions, composed of celerytonicsarsaparillabeermilkgingeralebreakfast, were in a prime, not to say disturbing, condition. "I will not get sick," said Forestville; "it would not be manly,"—so he held his own, and what he had paid for. Into Eeconomics he rushed, getting there just in time to answer "here," with a hiccough, as "Forestville" was called.

Forestville was getting doubtful as to whether he really was jagged or not, and thinking the best way to convince himself of his uproarious condition would be to convince those about him of the fact. "Where did we leave off?" inquired Dr. Aldrich. "At a high-ball," replied our hero. "You need not try to be funny," says Aldrich, as he began his lecture. Forestville remains passive for several moments, then Aldrich in his lecture says:

"Suppose you were a workman, you would wake up some fine morning and say, 'See here! is this all right for me?' " "It may be for you, but it's mighty slow for us," said Forestville from a back seat.

"Mr. Forestville! If you don't keep better order you will have to leave the room." The Doctor goes on for several minutes without interruption. "...that reminds me of an awfully good story a friend of mine from Massachusetts told me the other day." "I have a better one than that," said Forestville; "did you ever hear the one about 'Good-bye, Doctor?'" "You may tell me good-bye," said Dr. Aldrich with a self-approving "ha! ha!" "All right, if I am able to—Good-bye, Doctor, whu, whu."

Forestville stepped toward the door, but the steam-heated room had had its effect. "Open the window!" yelled our sport; "I'm at sea!" Just in time was the window opened, and for several minutes the class howled and Dr. Aldrich blushed.

When the operation was finally over, Forestville, pale, weak, and sober, faced the professor. "Did you do that on purpose?" stammered the Doctor. "Not I." "Well, who did?" said Aldrich, and the class howled the more.

"This lecture is over for to-day," says the professor, and Forestville, limp as a rag, was carried downstairs by his classmates.

After a wash-up and several glasses of water the hero was prevailed upon to tell his tale. "Well, I started out at about twelve last night, and between that hour and twelve to-day I have swallowed fourteen high-balls, five Martini cocktails, seven straightls, a pint of champagne, three gin fizzes, and a Sloe gin ricky—and would have had another, but the Sloe gin ran out."

The throng was divided in its opinion—other "would-be" sports admired: the students were shocked; the moralists grieved; a few doubtful as to whether the number of gin fizzes were correctly enumerated, and others started a discussion as to the quantity of liquid Forestville had imbibed.

The newly-made sport, resting on what he thought his laurels, heaved a great sigh, and wished there were someone in the class who would go out with him that night, saying he would drink what they ordered. "I'll take you up on that," said Melson, the class' most quiet member, who hailed from southeastern Kentucky. "Oh! for a hole to crawl out of this fearful trap," thought Forestville; but there was no crawling now. "We might start off with a small dram right now," said Melson, and sent "William" to Del Corral's for the needful. When the pint arrived Forestville looked green, but he thought to himself, "I can't get out." Glasses were produced, and Melson poured out five fingers each, saying "Here's luck," as he drank his down. "Here's luck," said Forestville, weakly, as he shut his eyes and took his medicine.

The fiery water made him dizzy, and he found himself, when he woke up, lying on the grass with his head in Melson's lap. "Where am I?" asked Forestville. "You're here, all right," said Melson, "but just now you swore you were in the Cosmopolitan drinking sterilized milk." "I'll never drink again," said Forestville.

Forestville is now a Senior, and I advise all those who wish to be sports to first see this pastmaster in the art. He will answer them with the dignity that becomes his station: "All acquired habits, good or bad, are more or less dangerous to the adventurer."

RECORD—Seven out of eight on the wing. Held by President LEAKE.

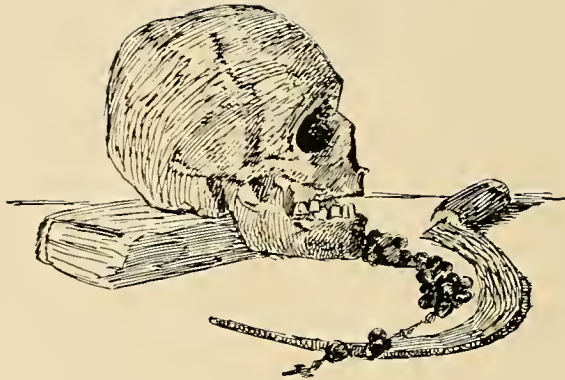

CASUALTIES—The "Retriever" received a severe wound on the left forefoot, and was forced to limp for two weeks. "Gloomy Gus" was the guilty party.

The great number of V-P's was deemed necessary on account of the dangerous character of the Club. "Myself" did not get a chance to serve, however, because "Pink" insisted on keeping out of range all the time, and survived the whole season with actually only one wound, and that inflicted by himself, and not the ambitious "Myself," as may be first thought.

The Cynic.

Why admire a face that is pretty?
Why love a face that is fair?
Why like hazel eyes or brown ones?
Or cherubic lips so rare?
What is the face but skin?
What is the eye but a lamp?
Back of them all we find a skull
Greyishly colored and damp.

Concerning Babylon (and Billy Smith).

MANY, MANY YEARS AGO, about 25,000 B. C., during the reign of the good Queen Bess, in the dawn of civilization, in the distant land of Babylon, the silvery Euphrates flowed past the pyramids; flowed past the Eternal City, ever wending its way, until it, horrified, stopped in front of the second house on the left as you enter the Moulin Rouge.

In this land, so far from us in time and place, dwelt a queer people, unique in habits as well as in looks. They were very mathematical, and were all co-ordinate. Their backs were bent in beautiful parabolas, and their eyes were perfectly elliptical. Their houses were all built in proportion, and all agreed harmonically.

The plants of this strange country were entirely different from those to which we are accustomed. There were long fields of triangular cabbages, while the parallelogramatic robes were magnificent.

The tastes of these people were simple. Their diet consisted of pattie de foi gras, lobster a la Nuremberg, Limberger cheese, and absinthe. It can easily be seen that, on this diet, they became rapidly oblivious to their earthly surroundings, and necessarily spent much time in bed. Thus they became accustomed to looking at the heavens through their sky-lights, and in course of time they contracted Geometry and other afflictions of the human race which spring from an ideal mind—the devil's workshop.

Such is the land, and such the people from which is sprung the noble Willy B. Smith.

One day, the inhabitants of the Moulin Rouge, who were attending Summer School under Prof. Fortier, on the banks of the Euphrates, in the shade of the leaning tower of Pisa, saw, with surprise, a mummy which had lodged on the banks of the Old Basin. Prof. Fortier, overjoyed at such a find, examined the mummy carefully, and pronounced it a very rare specimen of a people never seen before by civilized men. He claimed it as his own; then taking it home he gave it some lobster salad, and Limberger cheese, the only food in the house at the time. (You see, Prof. Fortier was a scientist also.) Suddenly the mummy winked his left eye, two and one-half times, and then sprang out at random, executing a parabola in the air, and landing on his feet.

This only living specimen of this long dead nation was persuaded by Prof. Fortier to teach Mathematics at Tulane University. Now, he has discovered his long lost work on Geometry, and will soon set out to seek his others.

Thus have we the queer and uncanny story of Smith in a nutshell,

By a

Babbling Babylonian, an Ardent admirer of
DR. W. B. SMITH, Esq.

Tulane in the Next "Who's Who in America."

---

The publishers of the 1905 edition of "Who's Who in America" have given us some advance sheets of their publication for that year which we reprint.

WOODVILLE, JOSEPH ALPHONSO GASTON WARREN LEOPOLD—This youth was always precocious from the very moment of his birth. His parents at once recognizing his remarkable precocity gave him the aforementioned lengthy name. The name is absolutely meaningless, but it sounds well. This great man shows a great foresight in picking the ponies that get left at the post. His luck in this respect is something marvellous. It is claimed that there is no one in college who can do this as well as J. A. G. W. L., with the possible exception of Leake, who is a co-partner in this business. His other occupations are raising families, playing euchre and making "summa cum laude."

WESTFELDT, GUSTAF RUDOLPH—The nationality of this specimen of manhood is in doubt. Rival claims have been made that he is a Swede, an Irishman, and an Englishman. The probabilities are, however, that he is of a mixed breed. As a jollyer of the girls he is incomparable, but as a jollyer of the professors he is not such a success. Possesses a very lovable disposition, which takes with the opposite sex. His general characteristics are those of a good student.

ESHLEMAN, I AM IT—This gentleman possesses all the characteristics of a great man, and Tulane will have cause to boast of him in days to come. He is a great traveller, having visited every place in the world worth the while. There is nothing that he cannot do and he is the kind of man the world is crying for to-day. There is not the slightest doubt that he will set the world afire. He is indeed a great man.

MAGNÉ, FRANCIS—One who is noted for his silence. He hardly, if ever, speaks a word, and those that he does speak are priceless jewels of wisdom. Of all things he abhors liquor and can honestly and candidly say that he has never touched a drop in his life. He is one of the most earnest opponents of football, and it will be due to his efforts that that brutal game will be abolished. A great debater.

KOSTMAYER, HIRAM WATKINS—A student for the ministry. The religious turn of mind of this youth is something inspiring. He is already commencing a crusade against all forms of gambling and vice, such as playing the races, poker and all card games, matching, and the like. He threatens to deprive the Rev. C. V. Edwards of his pulpit. The hopes of the Senior Class are centered in him.

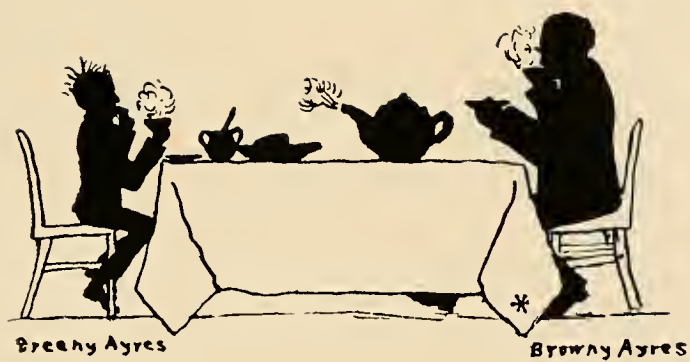

SMITH, WILLIAM BENJAMIN—This gentleman is able to trace his ancestry as far back as Babylonia and Chaldea. He also had near relatives who resided in Assyria and were of the "400" in that great nation. He has inherited a genius for mathematics from those great people. His researches in this line have brought forth a full and authoritative list of the Babylonian dynasties, of which his grandfather, ten thousand times withdrawn, was the founder. He is indeed a very great man.

LEFEBRE, ALBERT—This noted philosopher received his early training on Texan ranches. He started out in the humble position of a bar-keeper, but was promoted through successive stages until he became a great ranch owner. It was but one step higher to Philosophy. Giving up his ranch and the emoluments therefrom, he took a position as teacher of philosophy. His specialty is the Philosophy of the "Bones."

ALDRICH, MORTON ARNOLD—One of the wisest men in Tulane's faculty. His beauty has become proverbial with all Tulanians. He believes that there is no college like Tulane and of all universities he abhors Harvard. His favorite game is seven-up.

Our Dean he did integrate,
Until disturbed by stomach ache.
Now for such pains and aches and cares
Drink T-E-A, says

BROWNY AYRES.

Time, 0:24 4-5; 0:48 3-5, 1:14 1-5; 1:28 1-5. Post 9 m.

Start good; won easily; place driving. Winner, Hannah Deiler, large chestnut mare, 5 years old.

Deiler laid in behind the leaders first half. Came strong last furlong and was going away at the end. Alice Fortier was slow to get going. Closed a big gap in the run home; just managed to get in in time to beat out Willie Smith. Latter weakened when the final test came. Bad ride on Dick Bruff. William allowed her to drop out of it on back stretch, and when he made his run he came to the extreme outside rail. Bugs Beyer set the early place on sufferance. Beyer quit when the finish came. Others were never in the running and did not show class.

SECOND RACE—The Debutante Stake, $1000 added; for 2-year-olds, $5 to accompany the nomination; $25 additional to start; the Tulane Jockey Club to add $1000, of which $200 to the second, $100 to the third; five pounds below the scale; winners of a race at this meeting to carry five pounds extra; starters to be named through the entry box the day preceding the race by 11 a. m.; those so named to be liable for starting fee; 45 nominations, three furlongs.

Time, 0:12; 0:23 1-5; 0:35 4-5. Post 6 m.

Start good; won easily; place same. Winner, Sunny Jim, dun colt, 2 years old. Sunny Jim raced Cotton McCall into submission in run around far turn and drew away without an effort last furlong. Cotton McCall is a quick beginner, showed lots of early speed, but the weight told on her at end. She is undersized. Pink Hart and C. C. Miller fought it out all last furlong. Latter punched off soon after start. Finished strong and would have been second in another stride. Kostmayer was cut off and knocked back at start. There was a lot of crowding and jostling first sixteenth of a mile.

Newcomb professor, noted for her dislike for the Seniors (on opening a door from which a cat issued forth) : "Good-bye!"

Second Senior: "It doesn't make much difference, as she classes us in the same category."

The Mirror Speaks.

“O II, I AM OLD—SO OLD!”

“Thrice ten years are mine, and the dust of a thousand weary memories. The years I can forget, when I am newly cleaned and polished—but the memories cling to me.”

“I am no dainty filagree affair, to lie in a tangle of ribbons and jewels on a woman's dressing-table,—no tall, carved pier-glass to reflect the petty follies of a drawing-room,—but a common mirror set in a round, metal frame: a thing of use sufficient vanity, to search out his gray hairs.”

“The man who owned me did both. I have reflected faithfully his lightest mood—the weary yawn after a night of dancing—the cynical curl of the lip over a foolish letter, scented and monogrammed,—the impatient scowl at a bill,—the self-satisfied smile that always meant a scheme successful,—anger, contentment, inaction, contempt,—in the end, this last was most often for himself,—I have reflected them all, faithfully, and they are the memories.”

“Are you surprised that I call them weary?”

“There is no startling deed among them; no crime, no treachery, no great surprise even; he was a man who took all for granted, and while passing emotions ruffled the calm of his face for an hour or so, he never struggled against Fate. He took what came without whimpering. If it were happiness, he opened his arms to it: if misfortune, he faced it as a man should, with a curse or two perhaps, but never a complaint.”

“I remember well when, in his college career, he would come in, often later than a youngster should—he was never a model man—humming a snatch of song under his breath, flinging gloves one way, cap another, and sit down to spend the rest of the night over a hard bit of Greek or a knotty theorem.”

“Once he reeled in—cheeks flushed, eyes dark and shiny, and steadied himself before me with the queerest look on his face. I gave him back, line for line, shade for shade, all that I saw, and with the unreasoning impulse of a drunken man he stared till he could steady himself no longer: even then, disgust was the strongest expression on his face, and when he turned away, I caught the muttered word ‘cad.’”

“He did not become a drunkard—that is not among the memories—he was only the average man.”

“He had many little love affairs, to judge by the photographs that encircled the room; but I think his heart was never very deeply touched; there was no room in his life for small complexities, save in his leisure moments.”

"Once he stood for half an hour—I knew it by the clock over the mantelshelf—looking at a woman's face, framed in silver, which stood on his desk, but in the end he shrugged his shoulders, and threw the picture into the fire, with the muttered comment that they were "none of 'em worth it."

"After that he looked at the photographs as he looked at the pictures on his walls, with a purely impersonal regard, and I do not think any woman ever influenced his life."

"At first the room had all the paraphernalia of a boy's belongings; later, these disappeared, and were succeeded by articles of a severer grace; but when the man's face grew older and his forehead showed deeper lines, everything that was not absolutely necessary was banished from the room."

"The desk was a litter of paper and pens; loose sheets or MSS., for the man dabbled in literature; and old letters. There were books on the table, occasional magazines, pipes, a tobacco jar, and a volume of Browning that no one dared to move."

"I have seen the man, when his eyes were deep and haggard with work, bury himself in that old volume and, statue-like save for the smoke that drifted upward from pipe or cigarette, sit for hours without moving. The face he turned to me afterwards was always rested and stronger."

"He was never a success, in his own eyes, though men called him brilliant, and toward the last he grew cruelly contemptuous of himself. He would stand often and stare at me, not as a woman might, in vapid admiration, but with sharp searching for weakness and frailty."

"I tried not to show him the hard, bitter lines around his mouth, and the disbelief that gleamed in his eyes, but he saw it all and, knew."

"Then there came a time when he was stricken, hand and foot, with a deadly stillness: 'paralysis,' the people said, who came to nurse him. None of him was alive save his eyes, dark and shiny, as in that first night's drunkenness, but he made them understand his will—and so, one day, when the rain was gray on the window-pane, and draggled sparrows chirped under the house-eaves, they took me from the wall and held me where those eyes could stare into me, as they had done so many times before."

"The people around him thought it the childish caprice of a dying man, but I knew better."

"He stared hard,—all the disappointment, and distrust, and disbelief of a man who had known the world, in those great, bright eyes,—then his mouth worked—inarticulate sounds came from his throat, and, as they who watched bent low to hear him speak—"not worth it," he said, and died in the saying."

"Oh, I am old—so old!"

"Thrice ten years are mine and the dust of a thousand weary memories."

“If; or Dicky’s Dream.”

All Tulane boys, where e’er ye be,
Who love your alma mater grand,
From Mrs. Tilton’s library
To where we need a new grand-stand,
Forsooth ye seem a sleepy band—
No college spirit worth a d—n—
Far otherwise—oh! raising sand!
If Dicky Bruff were Alderman!

The man who at the head you see
Is nothing but a “speaker,” planned
To talk a lot and oversee,
To make dear Tulane’s “rep.” expand.
But not so Dick—why, understand
That he’s a most sagacious man.
Gad! Where fair Tulane’s name should stand
If Dicky Bruff were Alderman!

The faculty are fakes, Perdie!
While men as wise as Dick are banned,
To go around with no degree,
And all the jokes and jeers withstand;
We want one who can take in hand
A Tulane gang that raises sand;
And such a one would take command
If Dicky Bruff were Alderman!

Eddy Andy, play the grand;
Get us all the $ you can;
Why, that’s what we would sure demand,
If Dicky Bruff were Alderman!

"PAMMY AND HIS PA."
(Coming and Going.)

The Tulane Primer.

PROFESSOR DEILER.

Is that an omnibus coming down the street, or is it only a street-car? Ah, now we see what it is; it is Professor Deiler. He is on his wheel, but you can not see the wheel. Stick a pin in the tire, and see what a funny noise it will make. That is it. When the Professor catches you, you will make a funny noise too. It will sound like George Robertson trying to take a high note.

PROFESSOR MILLER.

Is that a fire approaching, or is it only a rain-bow? It is too small for a fire, and has too many colors for an ordinary rain-bow. Now we see what it is; it is his tie, and Professor Miller. His modesty makes him wear such ties; he knows that no one would care to look at him while he wears such a beautiful tie. We would suggest that he rent his tie to the I. C. R. R. to serve as a headlight. In this way it would be useful as well as ornamental.

PROFESSOR DILLARD.

Who is that man who is shouting things about "damnable corporations"? That, my child, is Professor Dillard, the Latin teacher. He is in a bad humor this morning, because he got up too late for breakfast. Presently he will call the first boy who misses his lesson, "a useless parasite" and "a negro washerwoman." Then he will feel better, and will tell the class how much better it is to go without breakfast in the morning, and how, in 1285, an Italian lived to be 100 years old, eating only a dish of Force every day. Then he will tell a joke. You can tell by his expression that it is a joke. Then the boys will laugh (all except the parasite) and he will dismiss them. It is very nice to be under Professor Dillard.

PROFESSOR ALDRICH.

This is a room. The walls are covered with placards, such as "What would Theodore do?" "No man can live without eight hours of intense work per day." But can that be Professor Aldrich, the exponent of the strenuous life, asleep in the bed? Yes, that is he. It is 11:30 a. m., but he is resting. He is going to lecture some time next year; besides, examinations will be here in a month or two, and he doesn't want to let himself get run down. Presently he will wake up and say: "My, my, I have missed my class." But his class will not miss him, to any great extent. Would you not like to be in Professor Aldrich's class?

PRESIDENT ALDERMAN.

My, my, where is that awful draft coming from? It is coming from the Assembly Hall, where President Alderman is speaking, and it makes you feel as if you were standing over a radiator. Why does he talk so much? My child, think what would happen if all that were shut up inside him!!! He would blow up. This would make a horrid noise, and, besides, it would spoil the wall-paper. No, it would not be fun to pick him off the wall.

PROFESSOR SMITH.

What is that savage-looking man trying to do to the poor blackboard? He seems to be trying to get on the other side of it without going around. But he is only drawing a bold curve. He is the boldest man in the faculty—at drawing curves. Is he a good teacher? I would hate to say, my child, but his voice would sound well at a political meeting. If he would only drink a little more, and learn to talk bad grammar, he might be quite a successful politician. But I should advise you not to tell him if you value your life.

PROFESSOR SHARP.

Is this a faculty meeting, or is it only some one being murdered? It is neither, my child; it is only a Senior debate. That young man who looks like a cross between an oil magnate and a dago, is J. L. W. Woodville, the celebrated orator. If you do not believe that he is celebrated, come to the Senior Study, and hear him celebrating himself. Yes, you can come any time; he is always doing it. He has been told that he resembles Patrick Henry, only more so. For Patrick's sake, let us hope that it is considerably more so. That scared-looking little man trying to hide behind the desk is Professor Sharp. But it is no use. Presently the orator will say something about "over all the nations," and his arm will sweep out in a circle of 350 degrees, and the Professor will be annihilated. Would you like to be in his class, and see him annihilated?

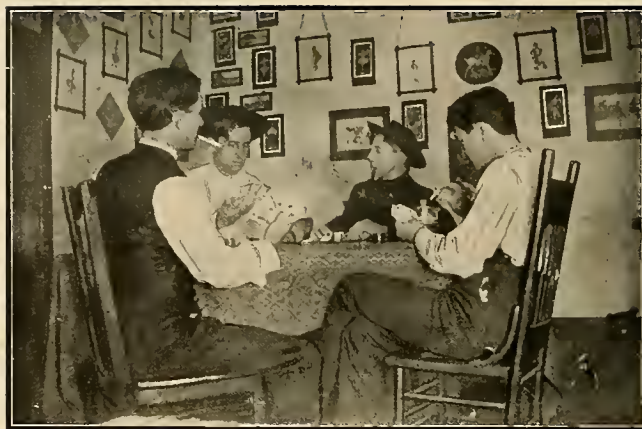

PROFESSOR AYRES.

Who is that tall, handsome man, with the benevolent expression, walking by? That is Professor Ayres, the Students' Friend. He is called the Students' Friend because whenever any students get into trouble with their professors, he takes them over to his office, and has a nice, long talk with them. All the boys say that he is a second mother to them.

MISTER BRUFF.

Do you see that stern-looking man who looks like Napoleon at the Battle of Waterloo? That is Mr. Bruff, the man who made Tulane famous. He is going to tell the President to do something. But where is the President? Ah, there he is, trying to hide behind the chair. He seems to be afraid of Mr. Bruff. But Mr. Bruff will not hurt him. He will lift him by the seat of the trousers and speak to him in a soft, kind voice. No, my child, the President can not tell Mr. Bruff what to do. Only the Seniors can order him around. Would you not like to be like Mr. Bruff?

Battle of the Green Cloth.

IN THE YEAR of the regeneration, 1904, there occurred near the cosmopolitan city of New Orleans one of the most noted battles in the history of Tulane University. For a long time previous to its occurrence a feeling of hostility had existed among the combatants involved. Much boasting had been indulged in by all concerned. Many had been the taunts hurled at each other: one saying that another was a tin-horn Knight of the Green Cloth, while the latter, in turn, would accuse the others of being "quitters," "jumpers," or "pikers." Excited by such talk, worthy of twentieth century prize-fighters, outsiders took much interest in the promised meeting, and when at last it was rumored that the promised battle à outrance was about to take place, the quantity of coppers and nickels wagered on the outcome was simply stupendous.

The fated time at last arrived. The place chosen for the combat was a certain room in the Tulane Dormitory. The weapons were two packages of common playing cards; the colors of the participants were, strange as it may seem, all alike—red, white, and blue—and made of pasteboard. By agreement, the length of battle was limited to all night. At the end of the melée the knight or esquire having captured the most of the enemy's colors was to be declared the victor.

Promptly at midnight the green young knights and aspiring esquires advanced to the death struggle. The first to engage were Sir James Wilkinson and Sir Oscar Sheppard, both victors of many hard-fought battles. In addition to being Knights of the Green Cloth, they were also Knights of the Bath, and Knights of the Garter. Both could not be victors where both were engaged, and Sir James was forced to retire from the field, his two gallant knaves overwhelmed by three red and black devils of Sir Oscar, with the loss of four royal blue standards. For a breathing space all rested and then, as if led by a common impulse, all moved forward to a general melée. Wounded in his last engagement, Sir James was slightly backward. Not so, however, the young esquires. Proud of the shining arms within their hands, they brought forward their banners with a rush. Foremost was Brunby, a cracker from the Blue Ridge Mountains, who, with red banners unfurled, advanced on his foes. Undismayed by the bloody flag displayed Sunny Jim Robinson forcibly replied; while the pale-faced Miller proved that he had not ridden the Texas range for naught, by the nonealance he displayed. All, however, had failed to take account of Sir Oscar, who met their forces with stronger array and forced them to retire.

And so, all night long the noise of battle rolled. To give all the details would be past the power of Macaulay or Alcée Fortier. To tell how Sir James' series of forces, armed with clubs and spades, was killed and scalped by Sir Oscar's band of heartless Indians, led by their king or queen, or how the diamond of Sunny Jim cut the diamond of Miller, would take too long. It is sufficient to know that when "Rosy Dawn stood tiptoe on the horizon and shot arrows of light from a purple quiver into the crimson sky," the knights and esquires were locked in the final death grapple. Sir Oscar, elated with past success and flushed with present power, had violently attacked the straight battle array of Sunny Jim. The shock of meeting unhorsed all others, except Miller. He, supported by a pair of honorable men and a house full of bullets, stood to his guns. In vain Sir Oscar and Sunny Jim advanced their forces against him. Secure in his position, Miller fearlessly brought out his standards of reds and whites, and when they were exhausted added his reserve stock of blues. With their flags kicked hither and thither and worn by the constant drain on their resources, Sunny Jim and Sir Oscar were at last forced to unconditional surrender, leaving Miller, now plain Miller no longer, but Sir Pale-face Miller, undisputed champion Knight of the Green Cloth.

A Ballad of Styles.

(With apologies to Justin McCarthy, Francois Villon, E. S. Sothern, and the Theatrical Syndicate.)

I wonder in what isle of Bliss
Yeremya's trousers fan the air;
In what green valley, Artemis,
At sight of Jorrin's, seeks her lair,
Where nymphs and dryads turn and stare—
The wind hath blown them all away—
For what short coat does fashion care—
Where are the styles of yesterday?

Where is the tie, once Jorrin's pride,
That far outshone the sun's hot glare;
The hat, that once did proudly ride,
On Kenley's taffy-colored hair;
His hosiery, so debonair—
The wind hath blown them all away—
And all the shapes of collars rare—
Where are the styles of yesterday?

L'envoi.

Alas for trousers! Pair by pair,
The years have made them all passée.
Those garments loose, of wondrous hues!
Where are the styles of yesterday?

The College Man.

---

I T'S A JOY to be so bold and free—
With class cap and badge of fraternity,
The college man.
And with ideas of what he is going to be—
The college man.

The college man is a frolicsome beast,
Ready for sport or a wild, fat feast;
He is game for anything, good or bad,
For he's in for what fun that can be had—
The college man.

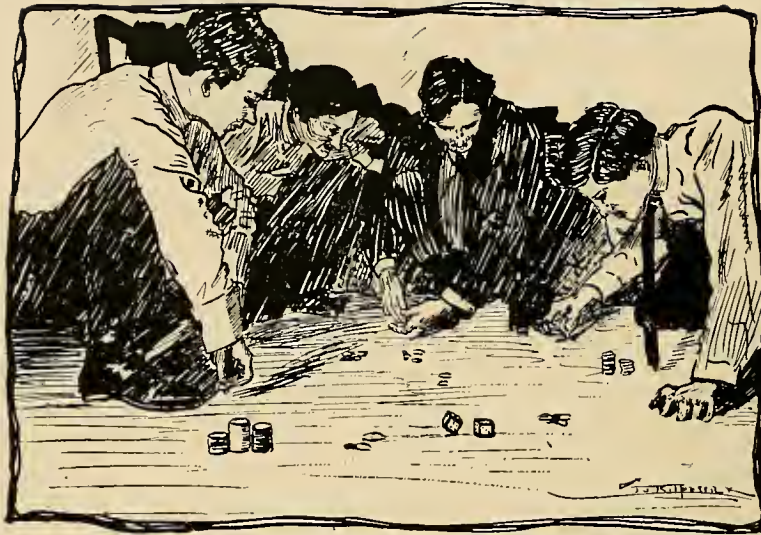

The college man generally hasn't a cent,
And is ready to borrow what'll be lent,
And he tells us his folks will send a check,
And the lender then gets it right in the neck—
The college man.

The college man boozes near every night,
And turns up next morning happy and bright,
Listens to lectures, but leaves college soon
And turns in and sleeps all the afternoon—
The college man.

The college man's in all games that are played,
And often for weeks in bed he is laid;
He thinks not a bit of the plunge or the fall,
But of the great glory there is in it all—
The college man.

The college man studies so very hard,
For he is afraid his mark will be marred,
At least that is what he writes to his folks,
But the college man's so fond of jokes—
The college man.

It's a joy to be so hold and free—
The college man.
With class cap and badge of fraternity,
And with ideas of what he is going to be—
The college man.

Down Where the Wurtzburger Flows.

---

We students do sing of the parties we give,
In the far-famed Theatre Tulane,
But the best thing for us is to learn to behave,
For it's there that the smart cop doth reign.
For he is a man that can never do wrong,
Yet those who agree are but few;
For though we were worsted, our rage is still strong,
And we'd like that fly cop black and blue.

Take me up, up, up, where the cop knows it all, all, all;
It was there, there, there, that a Soph met his fall, fall, fall.
Now come to the station, dear Taddie, with me,
And I'll see that this is your very last spree,—
The boys did protest, but the cop thought it best,
Up in the jolly old pit.

Apropos of Ford.

---

Friends, Freshmen, and Sisters!
Lend me your ears.
I come to state my side,
Not to dispute the other.
The evil that fusses do lives after them,
The good is oft forgotten with them.
So let it be with the Sophs.
The noble "Nellie" has told you,
"Ford SHALL play!"
If so, the Juniors forego the game,
And grievously shall the Sophs answer for it.
Here under leave of Nellie and the Sophs,
(For Nellie is an honorable Soph:
So, are they all, all honorable Sophs.)
Come I to speak of Ford's playing.
She might have been a Soph, for she has stuck to them;
But Carrie says, "What good does sticking do?—
She's not a Soph."
Many a time Ford with the Freshmen
Has taken gym.
Does this make Ford a Soph?
Mauberret has said she might have been Mrs. Ordway,
Had Evelyn been made of refusing stuff;
But Mauberret is still Mauberret,
And Ford is not a Soph.
You all did see that in the practice game
Ford thrice the ball within the basket put,
Which the Sophs did thrice extoll.
Did this make Ford a Soph?
Yet Nellie says she is a Soph,
And Nellie is alle-wissen.
I speak not to dispute what Nellie spoke,
But here I am to speak what I do know.
You all did side with us once—not without cause.
What cause withholds you then to vote with us?
Oh, judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And Sophs have lost their reason.

(With apologies to Shakespeare.)

A Wish and an Answer.

I want a friend, a faithful friend,
A friend to try and trust,
Whose love and staunchness will not end
Because, perchance, a gust,
Which oft Misfortune cares to send,
Has dashed me to the dust.

I want a friend to whom I may
Confide each gnawing care,
Who will not turn in scorn away
As I each weakness bare,
Who will partake my joy to-day,
To-morrow's sorrow share.

“This one gift grant great Heav’n,” I cried,
“And I will ask no other”—
A soft voice sounded close beside:
“Poor fool, hast thou no mother?”

Overheard at Newcomb Concerning the Class of 1904.

---

THE PRESIDENT:—They have more physiological knowledge and psychological perception than any class I've ever taught.

ENGLISH PROFESSOR:—They are all poets born, not made.

HISTORY PROFESSOR:—The greatest users of catalogues and reference books in the world.

LATIN PROFESSOR:—They are all modern Virgils and Horaces.

LIBRARIAN:—They have such low, sweet voices and rubber heels.

SECRETARY:—I never saw so many "excellencies" on reports before in all my life.

JANITOR:—It's a pleasure to wait on them!

GARDENER:—They know the names of all the flowers and never tread on the plants.

JUNIOR:—I'd give anything, even the cup, if I could only be as wise as they are! (?)

An Episode of 19—.

A maiden, bent on ancient lore,
On ethics, science and many more
Branches and studies in the realm of knowledge,
Came one day to Newcomb College.

Another maiden, more worldly wise,
Had captured a youth, with big, black eyes,
And all was well,—till one fatal hour
The studious Miss longed to try her power;

Not by solving deep problems, in her usual way,
But in a new study, "de homine,"
And so the result was a game of three—
And the college maiden,—well, we shall see!

Many a time by a word, a look,
She knew she was reading a different book
From those she'd pored through oft and again;
Thus whispered and echoed Love's joy and pain.

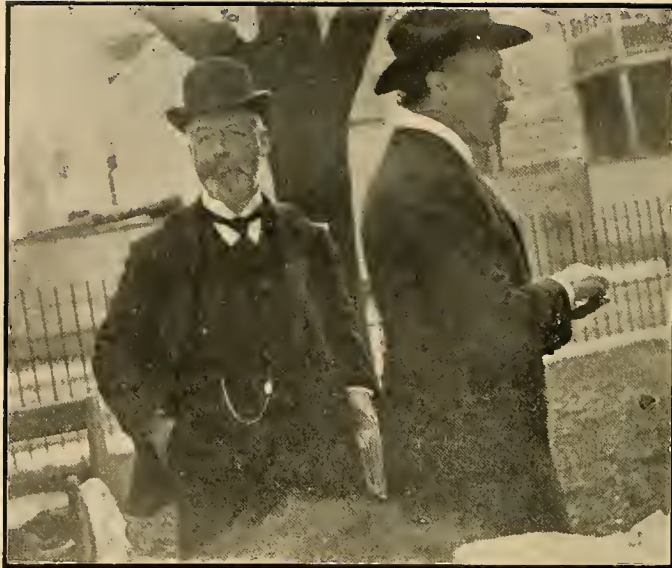

'Twas a volume penned by the arrow of Cupid
Writ full of pledges (and quarrels stupid),
But her power and magic 'witched the youth, until
These two stood alone on the "heaven-kissing hill."

Vacation came—she must homeward go;
She left with a sad premonition of woe,
And all through the summer now doubtful, now gay,
She dreamed of the winter to come, and the one past away.

* * * * *

Four months had passed quickly, college opened again;
She was back, vowing from all folly this year to refrain.
And the youth, in the summer,—was he faithful or no?
'Twas a question debated, and debatable also.

But their final decision condemned Cupid to die,
And a "Platonic basis" they concluded they'd try.
So here is a problem for those who may read,
Do you think that they'll fail, do you think they'll succeed?

If I were King.

---

IF I WERE KING—mon dien! if I were King,
What contumacious Freshman would I bring
    To osculate my hosiery, and swear
    To reverence le beau Franeais, mon chère;—
J. Hanno Deiler I would make to sing
La Marseillaise in French. Upon a string
The Faulty would be my finger-ring;
    And as the loveliest jewel, Bruff I'd wear,
        If I were King.

Let these wild dreams, and wilder words take wing—
Methinks the bell that tells the hour doth ring,
    And I shall give each student who is there,
    And says la belle Franeais is not most fair,
A zip; and I could do no sweeter thing,
        If I were King.

"Hürsch!" exclaimed he, as Aucoin's favorite Roane stamped restlessly, Jorrin the ground Klos by where the Pettigrew. The Wyly Stagg wandered thoughtlessly into a Barbe-wired Caffery which stood near by. With one shrill blast of his trumpet, the Sheppard brought his neighbors to his side. The manly Benson far out-stripped the athletic Brumby, while Kern-an Nelson brought up the rear. All was confusion and excitement. Westfeldt for his knife. Said Mar-well, who can kill him?" "Taddi-ken," said Bankston. "No," exclaimed Wilkinson, "he is an Amateur. Let Simon, the big Frenchman, 'pischney' him on the Tete," while Will-is holding him." After a nickel's worth of "pischneys" on the forehead, the poor brute was forced to Nield, where he remained for a moment in mortal agony, then "shuffled off his mortal coil." But, lo! upon the shapely neck of the stately creature was found a tag bearing the inscription, "Cate." "Now ain't that a Beasley shame?" said Colonel, as their mistake impressed itself upon them. With down-east faces they returned to their various Holmes.

THE CAMEL. "I say, Rhino, why do you wear that knob on your nose?"
The Rhinoceros. "Because it's knobby. It's meant for a hornament.
Anybody but a camel would know that."

The Camel. "Ain't he cute? What's the matter with his epidermis, anyhow? It looks as if it had been worn out, and then mended with imitation alligator skin."

The Rhinoceros. "Don't you know I am a pachyderm? You are slow. Get a hump on you."

The Buffalo. "Humph! If you two don't give us a rest from that camelo-pachydermatous wit, I'll tell Professor Beyer, and he'll take you over to his laboratory and make mosquito cultures of you. You must have straw brains, like that fellow in the Wozard of Iz."

The Monkey. "You maka me tired, Buffalo. You meana de Izard of Woz. Go to de barber's and get a shave!"

The Mummy. "Ring off, Monk! He means the Ozard of Wiz. This is about the worst wit I have heard for three thousand years, and, if you fellows don't do better, I am going to give up this job and begin attending Wednesday lectures. But I am as dry as a powder-horn. Won't somebody set 'em up?"

The Neanderthal Man had just opened his mouth very expressively to reply; but at this exciting moment William's step was heard, and all became silent again.

Scene and Characters: An ice-cream parlor, where a Tulane Senior and a Newcomb Freshman are discovered in the act of making away with a saucer of the frigid delicacy.

TULANE SENIOR. "Now if this were a loving cup, instead of a saucer, we would be a loving couple."

NEWCOMB FRESHMAN (two weeks later, thinking of an answer to the above witty remark). "But since it is only a saucer, our affection can only be Platonic."

(To get the full meaning of the reply, the a in Platonic must be accented long.)

If I only had some whiskers like Herr Fortier,
Silken tresses flowing to my feet,
Eddie Andy waiting on the table,
Richard K. Bruff buttlng while I eat;
If my figure just resembled Monsieur Deiler's,
And dear Aunt John would only be my wife,
If I only had a family like Woodville's,
Then I guess that I'd be satisfied with life.

(P. S.—Woodville is universally called "The father of the Senior Class.")

Ideas ; or, The Speech of Professionian Collectives.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—I have the honor and the pleasure of talking to you this morning on a subject of peculiar fittingness and dignity as regards our life in this institution in the far-off Southland. The characteristics of this type, as it were, is an, we might say, evolutional and involutional inovation. These are facts, gentlemen; those damnable corporations are making you hirelings! You will have to face up against this, or your morale will fall below what is the case at dear old Harvard. (I speak about Harvard, because I happen to know about it.) This is a generic idea, one of fundamental and transcendant import; maaster this, and you have maastered the basic thought of the whole doctrine: the profoundest thought that crossed the ken of Archimedes. If you contradict me, I will put you out: Moliere, Corneille, and Racine all said it, so it must be so. The city of the violet crown, which was the foster-mother of the blind bard of Chios, is an excellent example of this; Paley thinks not, but you can't tell. It seems to me, at least, that the careful student must perceive the poet's quaint humor and suggestiveness; at any rate, he gets an insight into the times, which is indeed, I may say, extremely valuable. This idea has always exerted a peculiar fascination over me; I remember when I was a student at Johns Hopkins, how Sir William Thomson (now Lord Kelvin) used to expatiate, in his wonderful way, on this subject. But Bismarck said: "Now is de time: organization, that is the seered of it; but Tell iss really not a hero; he has not de heroic qualities." But now comes the question, "Who was Patrick?" Patrick was a great orator, young gentlemen, but he did not understand the importance of the Louisiana Purchase.

With these words, Ladies and Gentlemen, which I hope will ennoble and enrich your lives, I close.

THE BUSINESS MANAGER AND HIS OFFICE-BOY.

GRAVE SON of old Paul Tulane,
Who wanted to make a great name,
Once studied Biology,
French and Psychology.
Poor fellow!! He's now quite insane.

A Senior named Hart,
In his studies quite smart,
One day went a'courting a maid
Who was swift as a dart.
Frank knew not fast art,
And since then, of all girls he's afraid.

James Dillard believes in single tax.
"Where land is abundant, who lacks?"
With a clap of his hand,
In a tone of command,
He says to us, "These, sirs, are facts."

Tulane has a teacher named Smith,
Who is well versed in Chaldean myth
With regard to Beltshazzar
You will find that he has a
Conviction that he was a Smith.

"Here's a question to face up against,"
Said Aldrich, and then he commenced.
The most prominent feature
Of this course is to teach you
To think economics condensed."

For Howe to teach physics seems strange,
Though his learning is varied in range.
He gives us a quizz,
He don't know his biz;
Let's telegraph Ayres for a change."

There is a young man named Kostmayer,
 Whose hair makes the Seniors perspayer;
     It's so frightfully red,
     That a humorist sed,
 That it looks like the Baltimore fayer.

A lawyer who came from Mobile,
 Slipped up on a banana pile.
     He fell on his nose,
     And ruined his close,
 And so lost his suit on appile.

When Benjamin Franklin and This Kite

Brought electricity from the clouds he little dreamed that in the 20th century the electric current would have become a commercial necessity.

Yet to-day, to properly illuminate your store, you must use the electric arc and incandescent bulb, and your factory is antiquated if it is not fitted with modern direct connected electric motors.

You literally burn your way into the mind of the public by using a sign of glowing lamps at night and keep yourselves and others cool in summer by means of electric fans. Phone our expert, 175; he'll call around and tell you how cheaply all this can be done.

INSPECTION.

All boilers under the care of this company are periodically inspected internally and externally by competent and experienced inspectors who are regularly employed.

The "Hartford" employs no Casual Inspectors.

In the event of accident or repairs, other inspections are made upon request, to accommodate our assured. At all inspections the boilers are carefully examined; also steam gauges, safety valves, feed and blow-off connections are inspected and tested, and a written report made to the assured of the condition in which they are found.

INSURANCE.

The Company imposes no arbitrary conditions; it is interested in no patented boilers or boiler appliances, nor is it interested in numerous insurance schemes entirely foreign to the business of Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance, but on receipt of the Application for Insurance, the Boilers or other appliances carrying steam pressure are thoroughly inspected and classified, and are accepted at a proper rate per cent., unless they are found on inspection to be absolutely unsafe; in which case the applicant is furnished with a written statement of their condition.

THE BLANKET POLICY of Insurance which the Company issues covers damage to Boilers, Buildings, Stock and Machinery; also from Loss of Life or Personal Injury resulting from Explosion, Collapse, or Rupture, and in a guaranty that the work of inspection has been thoroughly done. No inspection can be so careful and complete as one where party making it has a pecuniary interest.
