Two things there are that can't be beat
Under our skies of azure heat;
Like twin stars to our eyes they shine—
Alma Mater, half divine;
Newcomb, learned, lovely, true;
Evermore long life to you!

THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

PROLOGUE.

HE great sovereign of the material universe, Father Time, gazed out upon the immensity of his dominion—the realm of flaming suns, planets innumerable, of worlds made and in the making, of all vast unfathomable depths of space under the wide arch of heaven, and all subject to his absolute power.

Far, far away, a glimmering spot in ethereal space, shone the planet known to its own puny inhabitants as the World.

As Father Time's glance rested upon this planet he became aware of a figure drawing nearer and nearer to his empyrean mansion. Remembering the recent folly of Icarus, he watched the daring spirit anxiously until she stood before him. Her face, with its broad brow and true thoughtful eyes, shone with celestial youth and beauty, while a smile of maternal tenderness softened the proud outlines of her lips. From the folds of her gown of softest blue, bound with an olive girdle, she drew forth a volume.

"All hail, Father Time!" she began simply. "The children of men whom the Creator of all things has made in His own image, endowed with potentialities for good and for evil, I strive to uplift, to inspire, to raise to a level with this divine inheritance. I give them freely of knowledge and its power, and plant the love of truth, honor, and universal brotherhood in their hearts. They call me Tulane, and I have given you, O august controller of destinies, in obedience to your inexorable law, another year of my life. I come with a heart overflowing with thankfulness to bring you the record of my children's strong endeavor—their failures as well as their triumphs—and to offer at your shrine the final fruits of the many gifts which both my sons and daughters owe solely to your beneficence. With fond pride do I point out to you the eldest of my children, who, owing to your ever-advancing footsteps, now leave my once-welcomed shelter to go forth into the shadowy future, brave in the armor which I have taught them to wear, to await the successive recurrence of your many birthdays. As their Alma Mater, O Father Time, I do beseech you to deal gently with them. Grant them strength ever to retain hope and faith, though they lose fortune and friends. Receive also the record of my younger children, who have striven valiantly to do their utmost, and who deserve your approbation because of that striving, apart from success or failure.

“The whole tale of my life and of my children’s life during the past year may be found upon the leaves of this volume, which I now place in your hands. Look kindly upon what you find there written, Father Time, for it is our best, and records our achievements, our success, and our failures, the hardships and fears, hopes and joys of college days that are no more. Turn with a gentle hand the pages of this book, this JAMBALAYA as my children call it, and read the record of the many incidents which make up their college life. Speak, O Time, what recompense will you make me for the noble efforts of my children and for all that I and mine have brought you in the past year?

“Ah! you do not bemoan the yearly appearance of so many silvered locks, since they represent to the college youth and maiden all that is best, yet hardest to gain, and you will promise to my stalwart sons and fair daughters your never-failing aid and guidance.

“All hail again, Father Time! In implicit trust I give you my fairest treasures, and during the interval before you receive another year of my life I stand serene and fearless, secure in the blessed knowledge of your pledge.”

Father Time received the JAMBALAYA, and, turning the pages, read:

Just turn my pages and you will see
All the best of College life,
Mirth and mischievous jollity
Blended with a noble strife,
As we battle for the right.
Like a mirror here I hold
A glass of truth so burnished bright
You ’ll see our College record told
And blazoned forth in lines of light.

DEDICATION.

Dear Counselor and Guide of four long years,
Inspirer of the best that we have done,
Leader in paths of wisdom and of worth,
Look kindly on the offering we bring;
Although it be not all we fain would hope,
Receive it as the tribute of our hearts,
Devoted all to friendship and to you.

JAMES HARDY DILLARD.

The adjectives, distinguished or eminent, would displease Professor James Hardy Dillard, and therefore we shall not use such terms, although richly deserved, but will endeavor to write a sketch appropriate to the simplicity of a truly noble character.

James Hardy Dillard was born October 24, 1856, in Nansemond County, Virginia. After obtaining the degrees of M.A., D.Litt., and B.L. at Washington and Lee University, he became Assistant Professor of Mathematics at that institution in 1876. In the next year he accepted the position of Principal of the Rodman School in Norfolk, Va., and in 1882 became Principal of the Norfolk Academy.

He remained in Norfolk until 1887, when he went to St. Louis to become Principal of the Mary Institute of Washington University there.

In 1891 Tulane secured his services as Professor of Latin, and in this position, as in every other that he has honored, he has shown all who have come in contact with him that life is more than learning, that a man who stands upright before all men is more than wealth or power, and that only the fame that comes unsought for work well done and kindness never failing is worth having.

Professor Dillard is the President of the Public Library here, and is the author of several interesting works which have been very favorably received: "Arithmetic Exercises," "Selections from Wordsworth," and "Fifty Letters of Cicero." He has become dean of the educational interests in Louisiana as well as Dean of Tulane University, and as a contributor to the newspapers on vital questions and as a lecturer he has exercised a strong influence through the State and upon New Orleans for the good of the people.

Professor Dillard has secured a firm hold on the hearts of all the students by his never-failing interest, his absolute justice and "squareness," and by the splendid example he sets us of a man living the high ideals which he holds.

A gentleman and a nobleman in character and manner, he is a thoroughly democratic man of great learning and broad culture in society, religion, and politics. Tolerant, liberal, and hospitable to all classes of men, the love of his brother man and keen interest in his welfare are a part of his character, and he does not bend to social distinctions and conventions, but is what he believes.

The truth and strength underlying his genial manner only add to its cordial simplicity. It takes no unbending on his part to make the student feel at ease, and while no one stands in awe of his authority, everyone respects, admires, and loves him.

JOHN HANNO DEILER.

John Hanno Deiler, one of the most noted members of our Faculty, was born August 8, 1849, in Altoetting, Germany. He received his early education in the public schools of his native town, but his thorough musical education was given him by his father, a Bavarian court musician, and by the composer Antoine Mueller. Owing to his great talent, he won a scholarship at the Royal Bavarian Studien and Musik Seminar. In 1866 he entered the Royal Normal College at Munich, and was graduated two years afterward with high honors. During the following years he held Government appointments in several schools, finally becoming connected with the Model School at Munich. After this he attended lectures in the University of Munich, and pursued advanced studies in various branches of the Royal Polytechnic Institute. In 1871 he received a call as principal of a German school in New Orleans, and in 1879 he was appointed Professor of German at Tulane and later at Newcomb also. Since then he has become widely known as a lecturer on German literature and history, while his "Parsifal" lectures last year drew enormous audiences of the most cultivated people of New Orleans.

Professor Deiler has been prominent in many other directions. He is the President of the Deutsche Gesellschaft, a society for attracting and protecting German immigrants, and was the originator of the German Archives for the history of the Germans in the South.

In 1882 he founded the New Orleans Quartette Club, of which he is still President and Musical Director. He has been notable in several Sangerfeste of the North American Union, and as the representative of the National Union he addressed a huge crowd of singers at Vienna in 1890 and another gathering at Stuttgart in 1896. This same year he was made President of the North American Sangerbund. Locally, Professor Deiler is well known as the President of the New Orleans German Gazette and as a member of the Canal Street Commission.

As a reward for valuable services rendered, the German people of the United States, and for distinguished literary merit, he has received the Order of Knighthood in the Order of the Crown from the German Emperor. He has contributed to the leading periodicals of this country, in one of which he figured prominently last year in an article on the most noted Germans in America. The latest honor to be conferred on Professor Deiler is the appointment to succeed the late Carl Schurz as judge to award the prizes from the Leipp Memorial Fund offered by the University of Chicago.

Combining, as he does, these high intellectual attainments with a most lovable personality, it is no wonder that both students and fellow-professors look forward with the deepest regret to the time when Professor's Deiler's resignation will go into effect. He may rest assured, therefore, that just as long at Tulane shall endure will his name be honored and loved throughout its bounds.

THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

CHAPTER II.

Father Time paused, and as he turned the pages slowly, Tulane said, with a smile of pride: "These too are my children whom I have equipped with knowledge. They have gone out into the world and are even now nobly fighting the battle of life, ever ready, as they so valiantly did in the past year, to rally to my support in the hour of need."

HISTORICAL.

AFR

THE loyalty and success of its alumni are, without doubt, one of the most potent factors in the success and progress of any university, and the more closely united the alumni are, the greater is the weight of their influence. Tulane University is fortunate in having a large number of its faithful alumni working together as an organization, chartered under the name of The Alumni Association of The Tulane University of Louisiana.

Until January 20, 1898, there was no organization among the alumni of any of the departments of the University except the Academic. These men were banded together more to keep up a spirit of good-fellowship than with any idea that they might be of service to their Alma Mater. In January, 1898, however, some of the members of the original Association decided that the alumni could assist the University in many ways if the graduates of all the departments were admitted to membership. After much hard work on the part of the promoters of this plan, their idea was carried out by taking out a charter for the present Association. As the years go on and the membership and influence of the Association widen, the wisdom of embracing all the departments becomes more and more apparent.

It does not seem amiss to the writer to enumerate in this article some of the plans that have been carried out and are being carried out by the Association in order to show its interest in the University and its students. The under-graduates have been helped frequently in their athletic enterprises. The selling of season tickets for foot-ball and base-ball games has been managed by committees of members of the Alumni Association, who have given much time and hard work to aid the Athletic Association. When one of the skating-rinks of the city offered the use of the rink one night for the benefit of the Tulane Athletic Association, the Alumni Association was to the front again to help make a success of the affair.

A fond hope that the student body has long been cherishing is, that they will some day have a gymnasium. In order to bring about a realization of this hope, the Alumni Association has a Gymnasium Committee, whose object is to collect the money necessary for building a gymnasium. This committee is meeting with much success in its work.

The annual bringing together of the students, friends, alumni, and Faculty of the University on Tulane Night at the Tulane Theater was instituted and carried out by the Alumni Association, and after discontinuing the occasion for two years, it was again inaugurated most successfully this year. A neat sum of money was realized from Tulane Night and turned over to the Athletic Association.

During the heated campaign before the State Legislature last summer, when Tulane made an effort for State aid, there were no more earnest workers than the representatives of the Alumni Association, who gave of their time and labor in trying to induce the Legislature to include Tulane in its appropriations. Though they fought a losing fight, they have the satisfaction of knowing that they made Tulane better known in Louisiana than it had ever been before.

While the Alumni Association has done much in aid of athletics, its interest has not been confined to this one field. For the past two sessions it has maintained a post-graduate fellowship at the University, which pays the holder $250 per annum.

Special efforts have been made to induce the graduates of Newcomb to become members of this Association. They are beginning to see that as Newcomb is an important department of Tulane University, she ought to be represented in the Alumni Association of Tulane University of Louisiana.

Never before has the Alumni Association been in a more prosperous condition than at present. From a membership of a little over 200 in good standing two years ago it has increased over 700, and that in spite of the fact that many members were dropped at the end of 1906 because they did not show sufficient interest to maintain good standing by paying their dues. Although more money has been spent during the past year than ever before, there was never more money in the treasury than at present. Indeed, the future of the Alumni Association seems extremely bright, and as the years roll by it will be in a position to be more and more helpful to old Tulane.

THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

CHAPTER III.

Father Time turned to Tulane with a twinkle in his shrewd eyes, "These young people seem well satisfied with life, judging by their beaming faces."

"And well they may," was the prompt reply. "These are my eldest sons and daughters, the Seniors. The last year has crowned their laborious labors and brought them at last to their long-sought goal. Before them smiles a future all radiant with the light of youth and hope."

Dear, most dear to Alma Mater
Is the very strong man, Senior—
He the strongest and the bravest,
He the gentlest and the truest;
For his knowledge well she loves him,
For his knowledge and his prowess.
In his youth perchance he idled,
Frisked and frolicked with the lambkins;
Never hung in raptured silence
On the pearls that Ficklen uttered;
Never quaffed the cup of knowledge
Fortier held with smile enchanting;
But he danced the giddy german,
Flirted madly, madly jollied.
But those idle days are over,

Past and over and forgotten.
Now he treads the heights of learning,
Gathers prizes, gathers medals,
Rends the air with speech impassioned,
And the heroes cluster round him,
And the women rush to hear him,
And he strikes a lyre supernal.
So his Alma Mater loves him,
And he bears her banner proudly,
Proudly for to fight and conquer.
He the bravest and the wisest,
He the truest and the holdest,
And our heart in joy and sorrow
Goes to greet the gallant Senior
And to bid him win and prosper.

In Memoriam.

CLASS HISTORY.

Though the end is not yet, the Class of 1907 feel already the coolness of the approaching dawn, and see before them the faint rosy glow that ushers in the dawn of Commencement Day. Let us, then, before the coming of that day which will close our career as a class at Newcomb, review the history of our four years, find solace if we may in what we have striven and hoped to do, and in what we may.

We can not say that we entered college miracles of wisdom or of discretion, nor indeed that we are leaving it in that condition. "Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon 'em," but, alas! we do not venture to associate ourselves with Malvolio in any of these greatneses. Still, with more of modesty, we may justly claim some advance in both wisdom and discretion, and always at least the faithful and earnest performance of the task that lay before us. We have striven to fulfill Dr. Dixon's favorite injunction: "Work while it is yet day."

We have stood together and worked together as a class, though the time has been when our long-suffering treasurer has groaned over the non-payment of class dues; and it is of class achievements, not of the brilliant performances of individuals, that I would speak. First of these, the common heritage of all of the forty-five who entered as Freshmen as well as of the twenty-one who now find themselves Seniors, is our record in basket-ball, a record unequalled by any preceding class. No Sophomore team had ever been able to wrest the cup from the older college classes. Our Sophomore team beat the record, and—we have kept what we took.

Of course we have some weak points. Our bump of geographical location, in spite of the noble aid rendered by the Faculty, will probably continue to be as it has been—but little developed. Still, having learned when and how to study, we have in most cases applied our knowledge. The dinosaur no longer fills us with wonder and awe; things there are compared to which a dinosaur is but a small matter.

Now joined more closely together by a bond of common joys and sorrows, twenty-one of us remain to finish what forty-five began. We have kept up our class and college spirit through all the ups and downs of college life. In depth and strength of character as well as in knowledge we have grown, and now, when, after four years together, we are separating, it is with the certainty that our work at Newcomb will be a firm stepping-stone to our work, about to begin, in the outside world.

CLASS POEM.

PART I.

Scene: Newcomb Steps. Time: October the First, 1903.

It was the steps of a college, of Newcomb, that college so famous
That none ever yet to compare has been read of or dreamt
of by any.
Nothing was heard on these steps save the weeping and wailing of Freshmen,
Gloomy and sad at heart, doubtful what Fate had in store for them,
All unconscious that they, the wonderful Class of Naught
Seven,
Marvelous deeds would perform, gain heights never dreamt of by mankind.
Sorrowing thus they stood, when all at once in the sunshine Gleamed a figure resplendent, whose glittering shield and bright helmet
Proclaimed her the goddess Minerva, Minerva the goddess of wisdom.
"Great things will you do, O my sisters," spake she to the faint-hearted Freshmen;

"Loud shall your name and your fame resound through the College of Newcomb:
Cups you shall win by the score, by the aid of my sister Diana;
Cups you shall win by the score, and high 'll be the score of your ball team;
Thalia, Melpomene, too, will come at your call, and write class plays;
Urania will step from the skies to see that you flunk not astronomy;
Æsculapius teach you his art; Venus endow you with beauty;
Apollo as guardian angel will lead through the Forest of Math;
Clio will tell you the story of ages, both ancient and modern;
Versatile will be your pen, for the Muses all will adore you.
Jove has nodded and spoken, the Fates will not dare disobey him."
Thus spake the goddess Minerva, vanishing into the sunshine,
Leaving behind with her sisters a part of her wisdom divine.

PART II.

Scene: Same. Time: May the Twenty-ninth, 1907.

It was the steps of a college, of Newcomb, that college so famous
That none ever yet to compare has been read of or dreamt
of by any.
Nothing was heard on these steps save the laugh of a gay band of Seniors,
Save the weeping and wailing of classes who envied the fame of Naught Seven.
And the Seniors were conscious that they had performed well their task and "done noble,"
That Dixon's praise had they earned, earned the Diploma of Newcomb.

Surely Minerva'd be proud to welcome her sisters Naught
Seven.
Into celestial Olympus their diploma will serve as a passport, Jove will step from his throne, and ask Nan to sit down beside him;
"Have a glass of nectar, Miss Lyon?" in a dignified tone he will say;
"Nell, you may sit at my right hand and read me the JAM. of this year."
Yes, they who have worked well on earth will cause a sensation in heaven,
For then all Olympus will quake and thunder, "Hurrah for '07!"

HISTORY OF CLASS OF 1907.

No more shall it be said that the memory of man is fleeting, that it needs immense quarries of stone and quaint hieroglyphics to record its knowledge for the benefit of posterity. Henceforth, it shall be fixed and reliable as the Polar Star, and its stores shall be transmitted from generation to generation unchanged in bulk and quality. No more mountains of chiseled obelisks, no more countless tons of printed paper; there shall be but one chronicle, but one memory. There shall be no possibility of misinterpretation, no chance of promiscuous revisions and different editions, for the information man now has shall never be modified, never increased or diminished. (Prophetic.)

The simple reason for the above common-place remark, the truth of which has already been universally recognized, is that man will have but one great event to remember, one event the memory of which he will care to leave as a legacy, that is the sudden appearance, in the benighted intellectual heavens, of the ultra-brilliant Sun of 1907.

The dim sun which we are accustomed to see every day has reached its limit of usefulness, and will waste away; and this because, from now on, we are to have everlasting day, maintained by the glorious Sun of 1907, whose effulgent rays will penetrate to every nook and corner in space, no matter how many worlds or half-worlds are in the way.

The above remarks are the simple, clear, straightforward statement of facts. As it is meet that so great a conclave of beings as "1907" should be humble and modest—and brief, we shall mention but a few of the innumerable transcendental truths which "1907" has brought to light.

Heretofore, the eyes of men have rested on the bare walls of Finiteness, but now the all-enlightening Sun of 1907 has obliterated every line of demarkation, has rent the veil of Limitation, and displayed to wondering humanity—the mysterious and boundless regions of Infinity.

In Chemistry we have proved conclusively that the Simple Life is not an element, but a savory compound of Money, Automobiles, Wines, and Dishes. We shall not speak of our electrical achievements, for they would shock our good readers: but in Mechanical Engineering we have revolutionized the old accepted theory of the steam-engine, and substituted in its place the extensive use of waste gases from lecture halls. Besides, we have contributed to the practical world the Vigo Boiler, riveted with Talmage's Thumbtacks, and tested with the Murphy Steam Gauge. The solution of the two momentous questions, "When is an egg?" and "Why is an ampère a volt?" has drawn from our approving professors the most abject looks of wonder and admiration. And so on eternally.

Then, wherefore continue? The story of our greatness will never die, nor will you have to dig up dusty volumes to find it. "1907" will shine in the firmament of fame for time everlasting, and all men, all nations, all ages will adore it with the most devoted affection and reverence.

HISTORY OF CLASS OF 1907.

Medical classes are like medical men—there are all kinds and conditions of them. Some are good, many are indifferent, and a few are bad. Each has its own peculiar faults and its own peculiar virtues, for the character of a class is merely the sum total of the characters of the students who compose it. If it is made up of good students, it will be a good class, and vice versa.

In this respect the Class of 1907 has good reason to be proud. It is made up of good men, and is therefore a good class, as the records of its four years of existence will show. In each year it has been faithful, energetic, and painstaking, doing its work thoroughly and well. It has never shirked its duties or performed them in any but a whole-hearted and serious manner. There has been work to do, and it has done it to the best of its ability.

Previous historians have told how the Class, being but an infant, as it were, toddled through the first year of its existence and learned to walk in the second. It is the duty of the present chronicler to tell how, having reached the age of discretion, it strode sturdily through the third and fourth.

And yet, when one begins to write it down, there seems to be very little to write, after all. The doings of the medical student would hold little of interest to the outsider. Unlike his brothers of the other departments, he takes small part in the general collegiate affairs. His class has no base-ball team, no foot-ball team, no debating or literary society; it has in place of them an infinite quantity of work. As other people's work is seldom of interest, the historian will spare the reader a record of it.

Instead, he will content himself with the brief statement that the road has been long and the going difficult. There have been bright places and dark ones; days of sunshine and days of storm; moments of triumph and moments of despair. There have been successes and failures and trails and tribulations without number. But through it all the Class has been moving straight ahead. Though the way has been rough, we have crossed all our bridges and climbed all our mountains of trial and toil. We have attained our long-sought goal, and we pass from the portals of our college halls to write a new and more glorious history in letters of light in the annals of the Medical World.

THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

CHAPTER IV.

“And here,” said Tulane, turning the pages with deft white fingers, while Father Time smiled benignantly, “are my eager children, who have gladly received nearly all that it is in my power to give them. Even as they have overcome the trials of the past year, they stand ready for the conflicts of the coming one, anxious to equal and surpass the glories of their predecessors.”

Out spoke the peerless Junior,
Of old Tulane was he:
“Lo! I will fight from morn till night.
Beloved Tulane, for thee.

“For what can youth do better Than pore o'er Chemistree,
Deep Calculus, and musty Trig.
To win his high degree?”

“How better spend the passing hour,
Than plan with winsome guile
To knock the spots from Chardenal
And merit Fortier's smile?”

“To dig and delve in Physics
And strive with might and main,
With courage bold, for e'er uphold
The glory of Tulane?”

JUNIOR CLASS HISTORY.

Three years she grew in sun and shower ;
Then Nature said, "A lovelier flower
On earth was never sown."

Three years ago the Junior Class, then in her infancy entered upon her career in the dignified halls of Newcomb. And who shall say that that career has not been a brilliant one? Much have the members of "o8" accomplished in these three years, not only for their own Class, which is what many others have done likewise; but also for the College, which few have done so well.

Usually it is not well to enumerate your good deeds, but in an historian surely this is allowed. In case some young lady of another class is inclined to be sceptical, we will inform her upon this subject. In the first place, my dear, if you belong to a younger class, you are greatly indebted to our intercession, and the Faculty's consideration, for the easier course of study you are enjoying this year. We can truthfully say, "It was not so in our time." The Seniors also owe some obligation, for, the attention of those in authority having been directed to the state of affairs, their burden of work was also lightened.

Last year, though we did not win the only game of basketball we had a chance to play, we very considerably gave "o6" a chance to try their prowess against that redoubtable team whose triumphs look so dangerous for the rest of us and for the future of the Newcomb cup. But we thought the advantages in experience which the older class had over us would make them stronger opponents. The blame does not attach to us that they did not do their duty; we had done ours in giving them a chance to win. But our strength in this respect is growing every day—or, rather, every Friday; and next year it will be a narration, not of noble self-sacrifice, but of well-earned victory.

Moreover, we instituted delightful entertainments in our Class during the latter part of last year, which made that unusually long term seem to pass much more rapidly than otherwise would have been the case. And no "good fellows" have risen to the occasion with more enthusiasm and exerted themselves more to make everything a success than did the loyal followers of Gold and Blue.

In conclusion, let us say that during the remainder of our college life we will strive to follow the example of our deeds in former years, and we believe that in doing so we will leave to our successors the name of a Class which ever strove for the highest and ever attained that result.

HISTORIAN.

JUNIOR CLASS POEM.

She dwells in Newcomb's spacious hall,
A maiden fair to see.
In books and ball she leads them all,
This pride of the Faculty.
Her eyes are blue, her hair is gold.
Now tell me, who is she?

To her the haughty Sophomore
Awe-stricken bends the knee;
The little Freshies her adore,
And long as great to be;
The Seniors to her doff their caps.
Pray tell me, who is she?

Her essays she hands in on time,
And Pierce's jokes does see;
She ne'er mismeters Chaucer's rhyme;
Her element's Chemistry;
In Astronomy this star does shine.
Who can the wonder be?

She speaks Deutsch, Espagniol, Français,
Greek, Latin, like a Ph.D.,
Till learned professors pine with envy away,
(Unless they smile in glee.)
In Math. she's sure to find the "a,"
As you will here for me.

Oh! who's this maid all blue and gold?
Now who, say who is she?
Why, you must know; must you be told
Who Newcomb's darling be?
Straightway a loud hurrah arose:
"Miss 1908!" 'Tis she.

JUNIOR CLASS HISTORY.

Each college year adds glory to the already brilliant record of the Class of 1908. The history of the present Junior Class, as herein stated, must necessarily be in the main a reiteration of the accounts so ably written in the two previous histories. The facts, although they may be expressed in different words, must always remain the same.

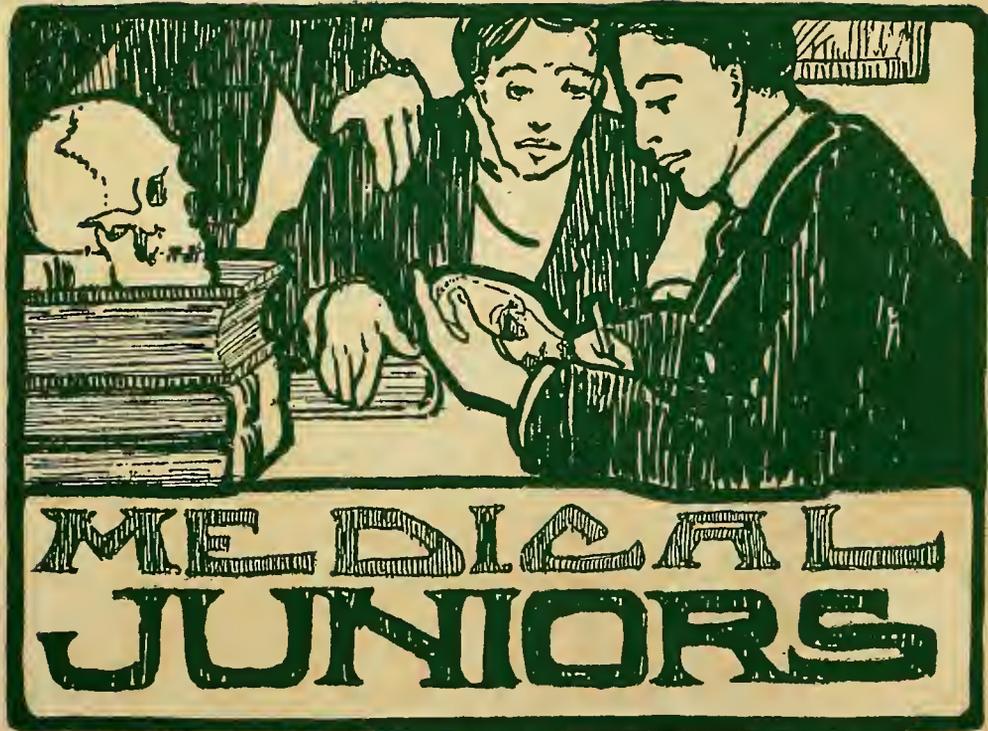

The Class of 1908 was enrolled at Tulane three years ago. On the very first day its merit was quickly recognized. The courteous treatment by upper classmen during the Freshman year testifies conclusively that its worth was acknowledged and appreciated. In Athletics and Scholarship "1908" began in its first year to establish a high standard, which it has successfully maintained up to the present.

In the Sophomore year the Class of 1908 gave further proofs of its excellence. It would take too much time and space to detail the wonderful successes of "'08" in this year, but I would render an injustice to the Class not to mention the crushing defeat administered to the foot-hall team of "'09" by the representatives of "'08." Never were the laurels of victory more modestly worn. "1908" in its characteristic manner extended an encouraging and sympathetic hand to the badly-defeated "'09." In Track Athletics "'08" was the victor in the Inter-Class Meet, and furnished the star of the famous meet with Vanderbilt and Texas.

The most pleasant part of the historian's task is to tell the story of "1908" in the Junior year. The deeds of this year are not so striking from a spectacular point of view. They are not victories in strenuous athletics, since these have just begun; but they are the scholarly attainments of the class-room. These must necessarily appeal to the conservative college-man, and impress indelibly upon his mind the qualities of the Class. The high rank of "1908" in scholarship has been so often commented upon, that it seems needless to say more about it. Although this feature deserves great praise and commendation, and should be told in eloquent words, it is the desire of "1908" that the historian make no mention of it. He has nevertheless, taken the liberty to tell of it, because it might encourage other classes in their struggling efforts.

The ties of friendship which bind the individual members of "1908" are certainly deserving of note. It is rightly said that college friendships are everlasting. In later years reflection will always recall the pleasant memories and joyful recollections of the "grand old" Class of 1908.

HISTORY OF CLASS OF 1908.

To praise "1908" is unnecessary, as she needs none. What she has done and is doing speaks for her. It is the custom for Freshmen and Sophs to praise themselves. This they do because no one else will. But they will soon learn that self-praise does them no good. When they shall have reached the high pinnacle of the Junior Class, this self-praise will have vanished and in its place will come thoughtfulness and hard work. They will have found that self-praise did not pass examinations. It would seem too much like the boastful Freshman to narrate the great deeds this Class has done. That is ancient history, and as I started to write modern history, I will leave out what we did when we were Freshmen and Sophs. We started with all the stars of last year, and a large number of new ones. We have in our Class this year men from Vanderbilt, Texas, and other schools. These we are glad to welcome to our midst. And extend to you a greeting of brotherhood.

If I tried to tell the deeds of a few, I would have tell those of everyone in the Class. This I would like to do, but, on account of the limited amount of space, I can only speak for the Class as a whole.

It must be very apparent to all who have had experience in class matters that the best and largest facts of its history are out of the reach and observation of the one deputed to write the history of this Class. I would find, little doubt, in the space of six months' session, events and achievements and triumphs that might crowd and distinguish years. But, as it cannot be done, we can only judge from the events of the past and the successful results. But it takes no power of synthesis to weave from the results a splendid fabric of single-minded devotion to high ideals and the severe requirements of the profession we have elected to adorn.

It is no ideal dream or boyish boast to assert that our progress through college for the last three years has been one long ovation, one succession of triumphs, since the hour when as Freshmen we entered Dr. Chaillé's office with quaking hearts, afraid to move lest we arouse his much-talked-of viciousness. But after that first we found that he was our friend. We dimly realized the mystic significance of our advent into the realms of medical learning, until now, when we are omniscient Juniors. All classes have acknowledged our superiority and have echoed our own words: "We are the best and first Class in school." And when, in 1908 we get our Diplomas and our Senior year is ended, the Faculty and our fellow-students will give this final verdict: Tulane Medical has been a better and a brighter place because of the lustre we have given it.

HISTORIAN.

AN ODE TO THE AMBITIOUS.

I.

I know, of course, that sometime I
Will be rewarded for the good
That I have done while on this earth—
And I have done all that I could;
In that eternal home on high,
Where life will be one grand, sweet song,
I'll get what's coming to me, but
I'd like it as I go along!

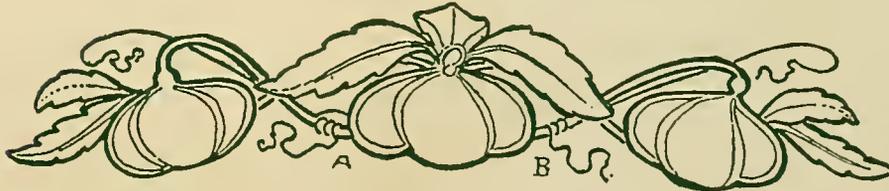

II.

I know they say that wealth is dross,
That riches have no power to ope
The shining gates of Paradise,
And all that foolish line of dope;
Yet I'll be glad to take a chance—
In fact, I'd raise my voice in song,
If I could have all that I want,
And have it as I go along.

III.

I want no statue carved of stone,
No niche in storied Hall of Fame;
Upon the page of History
I have no wish to write my name.
I only want my friends, my books,
Food, shelter, music, love so strong
That it will knock at Death; but yet,
I want them as I go along.

SIGISMUND EBERSTADT.

THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

CHAPTER V.

"What part have these bright-faced lads and lasses played in the last golden year that I have granted you?" asked Father Time.

"Much of the jollity and sunshine of the college world is due to them," said Tulane. "These are my Sophomores. I have watched over and guided them in the past two years, and they have amply repaid my loving care with loyal devotion and diligence, and from the bright record of their past I can safely predict a radiant future."

Once upon the Campus dreary,
As I pondered weak and weary,
Deeply pondering o'er the champions
And the battle-fields of yore,
And I murmured, gently sighing,
"Are our college glories dying?
Who will bear our pennant gleaming
To the victories we are dreaming?"
And voice prophetic whispered,
"He will triumph evermore,
He the doughty Sophomore."

Then I said, inquiring ever,
"Who so learned and so clever;
Who will cram his vast cerebrum
With all prehistoric lore?
When with other teams we're vying,
Who will send the pigskin flying?
Who will be our peerless hero,
Spending strength and spilling gore?"
And the voice prophetic shouted
Jubilantly evermore,
"Lo, our gallant Sophomore!"

A HISTORY OF NEWCOMB COLLEGE.

CHAPTER XXI.

In this history of the classes which greatly influenced Newcomb, we have now reached a most important date, the year 1905. In this year was entered the Class of 1909. We shall sketch as briefly as possible the events of its years at College.

Its début was one of unprecedented éclat. The main building, in acknowledgment of the coming of the Sovereign Class, wore its banner. This was indeed a fortunate thing, for it showed "09s" supremacy in the outset, so that the usual struggle between Freshmen and Sophomores was for this time avoided. The rest of the year was occupied in peaceful and uncontested sovereignty.

The opening of the next year, however, was marked by the brief but decisive encounter known as the Battle of the Colors. Newcomb had again donned the insignia of its ruling Class and all was going peacefully and well. The Freshmen had heard of the deeds of their predecessors, and thought they would do likewise. The first step, they thought, would be to clothe Newcomb with their Colors, so they came with this intention and the Colors necessary for carrying it out. When they saw the Sophomores, however, doubt assailed them and they grew afraid. They turned and would have retreated, but they were too late. The Sophomores saw them, approached, and perceived their Colors. Realizing that there could not be a prosperous reign when there was a competitor, even though such an insignificant one, they determined to crush at once this show of rivalry; so, gently but firmly, they demanded and received the Colors. Thus ended the peaceful Battle of the Colors, and with it the last show of opposition, which all realized would have been useless to "1909."

Now, therefore, there was time for the Sophomores to turn their attention to other matters, and this they did. They surpassed in the scientific and literary worlds of the College. They made chemical discoveries wonderful and important, they handed in mathematical quizzes undeniably perfect; they gave vent to glorious outbursts of Spenserian songs; their history essays have served as models for all succeeding classes. In fact, they showered welcome gifts of perfect work upon the astonished and delighted professors.

In basket-ball and in many other things also they surpassed; but the account of their other achievements will be given in another chapter.

HISTORY OF CLASS OF 1909.

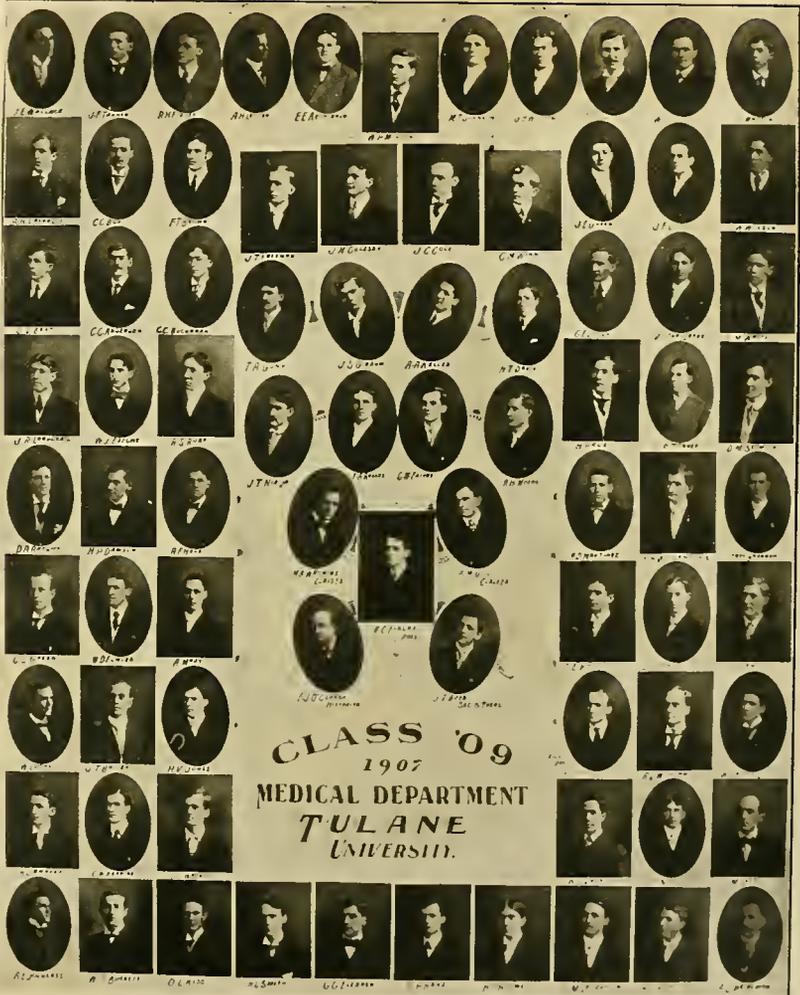

Our glory dates from the day of Founders, 1905 A. D., when we were called by the name of Freshmen. It was on this memorable day that we chased the puffed-up Sophomores over hill and dale until there was nothing left to tell the tale of the "o8s" except crushed derbys, red neckties, and standing collars, which the Sophomores in a paroxysm of fear tore from themselves to facilitate their still further flight before the wrath of the Freshmen. Had it not been for the great love of our Alma Mater, which is inextinguishable in the breast of the "o9s," we would have chased them into the Father of Waters and the Class of 'o8 would have now been an unknown quantity.

The next event of any importance in the career of the of Class of '09 took place after we had succeeded to the name of Sophomores. It was the training of that husky bunch, the "'10s," to be modest and useful around the University. Perhaps we were a little too severe with the young and unsophisticated things; at any rate, our beloved Dean came to the rescue and, with tears in his eyes, begged of the mighty men of '09 to desist and leave the Freshies to his tender care. Then was called an assemblage of the students of our institution at which the Class of '09 showed their nobleness and kind-heartedness by abolishing hazing, and in its place substituted physical contests. But what difference could this make with our illustrious Class? Was it not the Sophomores that dragged the Freshies through a slimy duck-pond, thereby gaining the honor of being victorious in a tug-of-war? Even after this, those of '10 were not satisfied, and they made a second attempt to bring honor to themselves in a game of foot-ball; but our mighty men of valor held them down to a zero score, and at last all were made to recognize the vast and incomprehensible superiority of the Class of '09.

HISTORY OF CLASS OF 1909.

It was in the fall of 1905 that there wended their way to the Crescent City a non-homogeneous body of students, the individual members of which presented many different phases of humanity in their varied trainings, ambitions, departments, and addresses.

They came from the villages, the towns, the cities of this broad land of ours, with many varied ambitions as the reason for their coming, yet they came with one purpose—the purpose of making the encyclopedia of medical knowledge their own—making it their own in order to further the relief of human suffering and the advance of medical science.

After many experiences of reaching the city, finding the ways and means of gaining an audience with our august, revered, and learned Dean, and answering the question satisfactorily, “Well, have you got the money?” they took up the task of effecting an organization.

Soon the energetic members of the Class in due form called a meeting of the students of '09. Officers were elected and the usual rules adopted.

It was amid the jeers and hisses and knowing looks of the upper class-men we thus made our entrance into Tulane medical life.

After spending several months in obtaining some initiation into the mysteries of the “Why” of Chemistry, a “parcle” of things about the life of a medical student, the Class impressed the Faculty as being a Class full of “grit” and having the quality therefore of holding its banner high above its rivals in such contests and victories in which the Class wished to be a contesting factor.

The Class has ever endeavored to be an active participant in all affairs of interest to the University, taking an active interest in some of its athletic activities and lending aid by the presence of its members at the time of the crucial test on the field.

Be it said to the credit of the officers of the Class of '09 that they transacted all duties laid upon their shoulders in a business-like manner and won the approving satisfaction of all the Class.

In the fall of '06 the Class returned with all the egotism, vain pride, and dignity proper to Sophomores, in honor of the event of their having worn off the “freshness of the Fresh,” and having been admitted from the Class of “babies” into the “peckerlarities” and “crackteristics” of being a Sophomore.

Immediately after its entrance into the new sphere of “Sophomoredom” the Class placed its hands upon the rounds of the ladder of success, determined to climb upward beyond any class which had preceded it.

Thus having narrated to you, reader, something of our former existence, we invite you to critically but kindly watch our future progress in our chosen profession. HISTORIAN.

"THE NEW PYGMALION."

BY GEO. J. THERIOT, '07.

I.

A tale of old with a setting new Beneath clear skies of azure blue,
'Mid tropic palms and shady groves
Where Zephyr at his pleasure roves;
A favored spot, to Nature dear,
Steeped in a rosy atmosphere,
Laden with rich and sweet perfumes,
Exhaled by hosts of Southern blooms;
A wonderland of sun and flowers,
A paradise of stars and bowers,
A realm fit for Utopians,
By fairies called New Orleans.

II.

There dwells a sculptor young and grand,
With noble brow and skillful hand,
Whose statues breathe the breath of life,
And mingle in the great world's strife.
One day to him a stranger came,
A kindly, good, and gentle dame,
Who, an admirer of his craft,
Presented him a marble shaft
Of wondrous beauty, white and fine,
From which to carve a form divine.
Straightway, from the column cold,
His masterpiece he began to mold.

III.

Fast fingers shaped the uncouth mass,
Into a tender winsome lass,
With figure lithe and smiling face,
Replete with rich supernal grace;
A maiden blessed with beauty rare,
With loveliness beyond compare.
The full young lips, the pearly ear,
The soulful eyes, so large and clear,
The youthful cheeks, the curling hair,
The slender hands, the rounded arms,
All yielded a being of dimpled charms,
A woman, fairest of the fair.

IV.

But lo!—the myth must be complete—
The sculptor loved his statue sweet,
And for her pleaded life and love,
Not from proud Venus, nor from Jove,
But from the Southland's deities,
Who heard his prayer and made her his.
She lived, and love lit up her face
As she returned his fond embrace,
And gave the kiss of loyalty
To him for all eternity.
He blushed, Tulane the wise and great,
And "Newcomb" named his new-found mate.

CHAPTER VI.

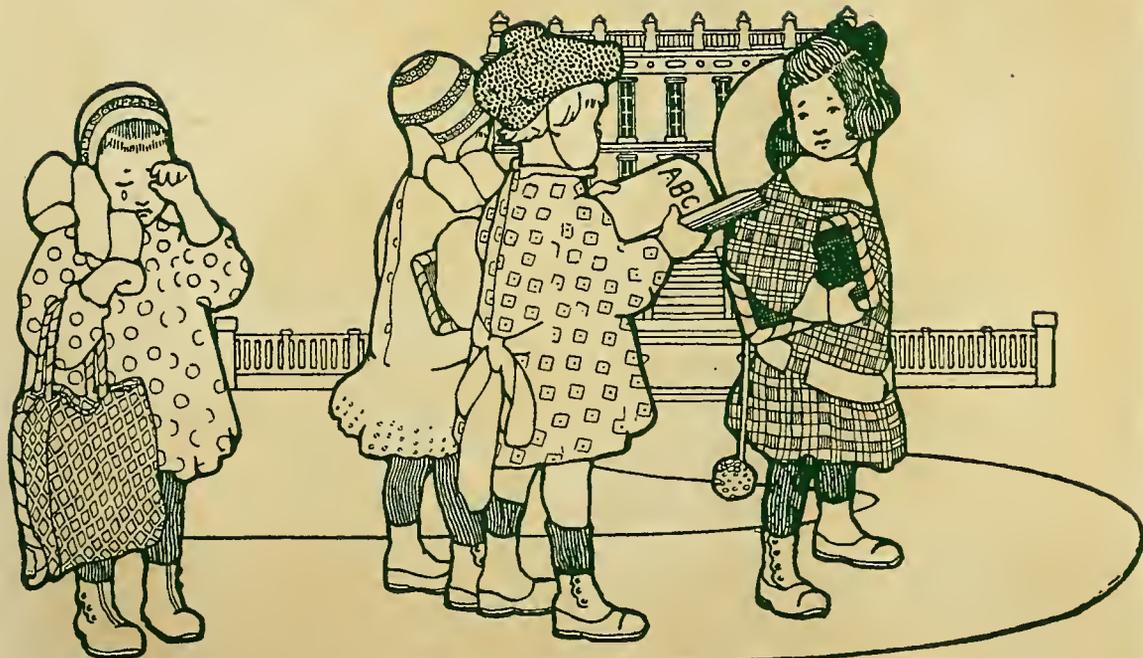

"My youngest," said Tulane, her face glowing with maternal pride, "Look, Father Time how eagerly they press forward on the roads of college life and learning, to win the highest places as the years roll by! How earnestly they follow the footsteps of those who have gone triumphantly before!" And even Father Time's grim face relaxed as he looked upon the Freshmen.

Who comes with sunlight on his hair?
Whose face is smooth and pink and fair?
Who lisps in accents sweet and rare?
The Freshman.

Who wears a tie of rosy red?
Whose daily fare is milk and bread?
Who early seeks his little bed?
The Freshman.

FRESHMAN CLASS HISTORY.

A PROPHECY FROM MARS.

High up in his turret bleak and bare,
The astronomer of Mars
Through his great telescope did stare,
To search the twinkling stars;
At last his wandering instrument
Upon the earth did light,
And then, to his astonishment,
He saw a wondrous sight.

A banner olive and bright gold
Met his bewildered gaze;
It spread its graceful silken fold
High up to Heaven's blue haze
And on its soft expanse of green,
In golden letters bright,
The figures "1910" were seen,
Like rays of purest light.

"I've watched for many a changing year
The classes 'mong all men;
But none have been to me so dear,
As the Class of 1910,
And 'tis their wondrous banner now
Floats heavenward so bold,
And I, the sage of Mars, do bow
To the Olive and the Gold."

DORAH B. HOLZMAN,
Class Poet.

The great astronomer in surprise
Cried out, "I know 'tis so,
That the sight which now doth greet my eyes
The stars to me did show.
I knew my arts had told me then
It was to come to pass
That Newcomb Freshmen, '1910,'
Would be a wondrous Class.

"I read by mystic signs and true
How great this Class would be,
What splendid deeds it was to do
For all the world to see.
In learning it would win renown,
In the arts and every science,
Through the years that lead to the Cap and Gown,
'Twould at 'Failure' cast defiance.

FRESHMAN CLASS HISTORY.

TEXT: "He walked right in, walked all around, and walked right out again."

TO THE DEAR PUBLIC:

Realizing your anxiety, and desire to be informed as to the remarkable Class of 1910, I hasten to so enlighten you.

Having gone carefully into the past history of each and every student connected with this body, and from carefully compiled statistics, it is my pleasant duty to inform you that from an intellectual and moral standpoint, 1910 stands foremost, pre-eminently, the acknowledged leader of any Class which ever entered the portals of Tulane.

And why?

Simply and wholly because she has the material. Science and Destiny have so arranged it that exactly one hundred years after the discovery of Algiers by Prof. Metz, a class of medical students be formed, composed of picked men from different sections of the fair Southland, to perpetuate the memory of this most noted alchemist. How well she fulfilled the fondest hopes reposed in her by Science and Destiny is exemplified by a carefully perusal of her history.

With an ease born of wisdom and learning did she take hold of the various branches allotted her, and nobly did she acquit herself. Her record is such as to cause a Senior to doff his hat and even an arrogant Soph. to acknowledge her superiority. Questions on slips of paper are received daily by the President of this Class, from the Juniors, and are answered without discrimination. A most interesting request to stand God-father of the Class was made by the Dean sometime during the month of December, but such request having previously been made by the President of the College, and not desiring to have a conflict between these most learned gentlemen (with the possibility of blows), after mature deliberation, the offer was respectfully declined.

All matters pertaining to the welfare of the Class are handled in a manner which clearly bespeaks the executive ability of the various officers and it is the concensus of opinion among the entire student body, and a fact generally conceded by the Faculty of Tulane, that the Class of 1910 will produce more scientists in the medical field, than has ever been accomplished in the fifty years.

This fact in itself was such as to cause a Commission to be appointed by the Johns Hopkins University to devise ways and means of intimidating the members of this Class to join their body. Such action on their part was soundly condemned by both press and pulpit, as you who read the various periodicals are well aware.

To go further into detail is absolutely unnecessary as sufficient information is given to enable you to comprehend intelligently just what has been accomplished. Finally, please remember that this Class has adopted a slogan, which in the years to come will shine forth in the annals of medicine and surgery as a beacon to the succeeding generations of man—viz.,

“We don’t know where we’re going, but are on our way.”

JOHN PETER'S PET PUPPY.

Lucia had a little dog,
With hair of black and white,
To follow her to school one day,
Much to the girls' delight.

Those girls they fed that dog on bread,
They fed that dog on jam—
And after that they gave him cake,
And then they gave him ham.

But yet, despite these dainties,
That dog he wanted more—
Alas! He spied poor "Brother's" coat,
A-hanging on the door.

And when dear Willie sought his coat,
'Twas not behind the door.
A sorry wreck he found instead,
A-lying on the floor.

Let's follow that dog's movements,
What next will he be at?
Oh, gracious! mercy! goodness me!
He's eating "Johnnie's" hat!

Woe to thee, unhappy hat—
Oh, bitter is thy fate!
Thy friends they sought to save thy life,
But they got there too late.

And on thy mutilated form
That once had been so fair
Thy owner's gaze is riveted
With looks of wild despair.

Another hat must do thy work,
That thou performed so well,
But how he'll get that other hat
Is something I can't tell.

Fair Art Students will keep thee, tho',
And treasure your remains,
For the sake of that sweet, noble head
That thou didst once contain.

(Air: "Die Wacht am Rhein.")

Where stars arise in southern skies
And loyal love in laughter lies—
O Newcomb fair, we bring to thee
Our heart's allegiance bold and free;
We bring it thee, who e'er shall be
The star of our ascendancy.
Newcomb, our Alma Mater, stand we nigh!
Newcomb, thy daughters lift thy flag on high!

Where deep and slow the currents flow
Past silent field and city glow,
We vow our loyal hearts to thee;
O Newcomb, Mother, thine are we.
From sea to sea shall never be
Thy equal in our loyalty.
Newcomb, our Alma Mater, stand we nigh!
Newcomb, thy daughters lift thy flag on high!

Where flames the fray, or fades the day,
By open trail or darkling way,
We stand thy sword and shield to be,
O Newcomb, Mother, great and free,
No dawn shall see our army flee,
No foe shall shake our trust in thee—
Newcomb, our Alma Mater, stand we nigh!
Newcomb, thy daughters lift thy flag on high!

CLASS HISTORY OF THE LAW DEPARTMENT.

Term of 1906-1907.

I will not call it a history of the Class of 1906-1907, for the larger half of our Class belongs really to the 1907-1908 graduating class. In us you see the bridge connecting the old order with the new, and this bridge has an important and not too easy purpose to fulfill, for almost everything is changed from the way of the old régime.

First, we have a new domicile, for we are now most comfortably housed in Gibson Hall, to which the Academic Department gave us a most hearty and highly appreciated welcome.

Then, our course of study has been greatly enlarged and made very thorough. From this October (1907) on the work will be divided into three courses, and even now it is divided into first- and second-year work. Now, many of those students who hope to graduate this year, basing their expectations on a former course here, or in some college in one of our sister States, or on private work in some law office, who have not already studied the course prescribed for first-year work, will have to "make good" on this work also.

Then the professors are mostly new. Our good friend, Justice Monroe, is still with us and he has his same branches, Commercial Law, Partnership, and Corporations. And Mr. Saunders was also a professor in the old Law School, but now his is our Dean, and he has given his old subject, Commercial Law Pleading and Practice, into the capable hands of Governor Shands, who, after thirteen years of teaching in the University of his own State of Mississippi, has come to teach us how they do things in our sister States. Meanwhile our Dean expounds to us our Civil Code, making the study intensely interesting and very complete, for he finds many things in our Code (yes, and proves their existence there too) which some old practitioners at one Bar had never noticed; and as we study these points from cited cases, we are bound to be well grounded in real knowledge of our Code.

Judge Marr has so managed his subject, The Code of Practice, that the various necessary proceedings "to get a case into court" have ceased to exist in our minds as theoretical possibilities and have become practicalities, certainly "acquaintances," and I had almost said "friends," for we have learned to draw all the proceedings to suit the various cases as prescribed by Judge Marr; so now, when we meet these forms in the course of other legal reading, they seem like old friends.

Mr. Schwarz has Constitutional Law and Equity for his branches, and Mr. Lemann has Torts, Admiralty, and later on will come Conflict of Laws; and though these young professors are scarcely older than the majority of the Class, still so uniform has been their dignity and so interesting have we found the "Case System" of study, which they have introduced into Tulane, that their authority has never been questioned for a moment and they are accorded the same respectful attention as if they had been expounding law for a decade or two.

Now as to the Class itself: On the register we have eighty-nine names enrolled, but a few men have "dropped out," either because of private business reasons or perhaps because the life was too strenuous, for now a Diploma from the Tulane Law

School means that you have done a lot of hard work and that you have done it well. Then we have a number of students who are either taking only the Common Law or only the Civil Law, so that leaves about seventy-five students (of whom two are women) who are taking the regular course, and of these some twenty-five (in which number the two women are again included) are doing all the work of both courses, preparing any required documents for either course, and also (and this is what really counts) "standing all the exams." in all the subjects studied.

We started to work October the first, and one first care was to organize the Class as a regular body and elect officers—only one ticket was in the field, so no hard feelings were engendered. Mr. Charbonnet, our energetic and conscientious President, is always ready for duty, so the positions of the various Vice-Presidents have been sinecures. The Law editors of the various Tulane publications and the officers of our Law Debating Club appear in their respective places in JAMBALAYA, so need no mention here.

There is no sex in brains, so may we all, men and women, of this graduating Class of 1907, be a credit to the Bar and the New Tulane Law School.

TULANE SYMPHONY.

By thine own soul's law learn to live;
And if men thwart thee, take no heed;
 And if men hate thee, have no care;
Sing through thy song and do thy deed;
 Give Alma Mater back her share.
And to thy heart be true thy heart;
 What thy soul teaches, learn to know,
And play out thine appointed part,
 And thou shalt reap as thou shalt sow.
Nor helped nor hindered in thy growth,
 To thy full stature thou shalt grow,
With Tulane's interests ever thine,
That through thy glories she may shine.

CHAPTER VII.

"Ah!" exclaimed Father Time, as he turned this page, "Brotherhood! That is the supreme lesson that I have endeavored to teach mankind throughout the ages! 'Love thy neighbor as thyself,' he murmured softly to himself. "I rejoice to see this golden rule so well put into practice."

BROTHERHOOD.

Beside the placid Sea of Galilee
The Master walked, and as He softly spoke
All nature paused to listen to His voice.
Within the white cloud-castle of the air
The rude and boisterous Winds were held enchained
With golden links and bars of sunbeams bright,
And so the trees held out imploring hands
Of stillest verdure, or with brooding arms
Hushed into silence every nesting bird:
The whispering ripples of the azure lake
Were stilled; and like a sacred shield it lay,
To hold the sweet reflection of His face.
O heavenly Voice, we hear thine echoes still:
"Greater than this no love can ever be,
That man should give his life for brother man."
Oh, may these words re-echo in our souls,
Bind us to duty and to harmony,
To patience and to tenderest charity,
To gentle judgment and to kindly aid
Of all who falter, that we too may hear
That Voice of mercy, when all voices else
Are hushed forever; and with humble joy
We feel the Master's blessing on our work!

THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

CHAPTER VIII.

Father Time nodded grave approval as he scanned the page before him. "The wingéd thought," he cried, "it is even more powerful than I! Down the ages it flies, and my dusky pinions cannot overtake it or efface it. Here, I see, is where it finds its birthplace; from these circles and from their labors does it draw nourishment and strength for the immortal flight."

SUBJECTS OF DEBATES.

- (1.) Resolved, That means should be adopted by which an A.B. Degree could be secured in three years.
- (2.) Resolved, That our Sunday Comic Supplement is debasing to the American character.
- (3.) Resolved, That children should be educated in every locality, whatever the cost.
- (4.) Resolved, That the study of Greek and Latin is a needless waste of time.

LAW DEBATING CLUB.

This association for the purpose of affording members of the Law Classes the opportunity for practice in speaking, declamation, and debate was organized on January 30, 1906.

The prime mover in organizing this Club was Mr. A. Giffen Levy, and he has served as its most capable president until this month (January), when, greatly to our regret, he insisted upon our electing a new president to replace him; one consolation we have, for now we shall hear him in debate. Mr. Rosenthal, who as our vice-president had all the arrangement of programs and choice of subjects for debate on his hands, and who so satisfactorily performed the task, has also resigned; so now Mr. Thorpe will have his duties, whilst Mr. Powell will preside in Mr. Levy's place. Mr. Starkey, who had been our banker for so long, insisted upon retiring in Mr. Feitel's favor; and Mr. Schwartz, who had been Secretary since the Club was organized, also wished to resign, but we induced him to consent to succeed himself; so now, under our new officers, we look forward to the enjoyment of many pleasant hours of congenial companionship, whilst we strive to develop whatever forensic ability we may possess.

It is not alone the knowing of the law, nor the knowing where to find it, nor even the ability to present his side of the case in a logical brief, that makes the successful lawyer, though these all do help.

But the greatest advantage a lawyer can have is the ability "to think on his feet" and to express his thoughts in clear, forcible language without that hesitation and repetition which are caused by "stage-fright" and which ruin the effect of the best arguments.

To take part in a debate or moot-court in our Club is about as near to what we may expect whilst pursuing our life-work as we can get until we really face a judge and jury, and the practice and aplomb we gain there will be of inestimable benefit to us in our future careers. So may the Tulane Law Debating Club long prosper, ever increasing in size and usefulness.

JESSY H. BENEDICT GESSNER,
L. D. C. Historian.

THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

CHAPTER IX.

"The motto of my children has ever been, 'Win or lose, we do or die,' " said Tulane.

"Yes," muttered Father Time, "the race is not always to the swift or the battle to the strong. Though sometimes vanquished, your children's standard of unconquerable spirit and honor floats proudly above their victors."

All hail to loyalty, bravery, and perseverance—the Tulane Athlete!

HOW ABOUT IT?

With nose-guard and head-guard
Each player marches by,

Now confident of victory,
E'en though it means to die;
Each man now takes his own place
Determined we shall win.

And Tulane gets the kick-off!

Good work will now begin.
Yes, Tulane nears the goal-line!
More zeal—we 'll reach it, too.
Now watch us make a touch-down
And beat old L. S. U. !
So would Tulane win always
If we only had the vim!
Use all your pull! for Tulane, boys,
Must really have a Gym!

Monroe, our captain and forward guard too,
Cheers us all up, so we never feel blue.

Campbell, the guard who plays on the right
And causes Breazeale to put up a fight.

Goldstein, back-guard on the left does play,
Then all little Soplies do run away.

Now, Dreyfous as center can beat all the rest;
The reason is clear, she is doing her best.

Hart is the manager, faithful and true,
Who works mighty hard for the Gold and the Blue.

Way back at goal is little Maud Woods.
I 'll tell you, my friends, she is "there with the goods."

Waldhorn, forward goal, is strong as an ox,
And she and Nan Gunther are learning to box.

Hereford, close by Miss Dupré does stay,
For these two little girls right forward do play.

Cunningham, Blum, Norman, Préot, are subs,
And never, no, never receive any rubs.

A PSYCHOLOGICAL LIMERICK. 3

There is a great college called Newcomb,
To which bright and pretty girls do come;
 But alas for their wit!
 They soon use up it
Making jokes that are generally gruesome.

Across the way is Tulane,
Of logic and reason the fane.
 They are ponderously wise,
 But the men still have eyes;
That jokers are trumps they maintain.

THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

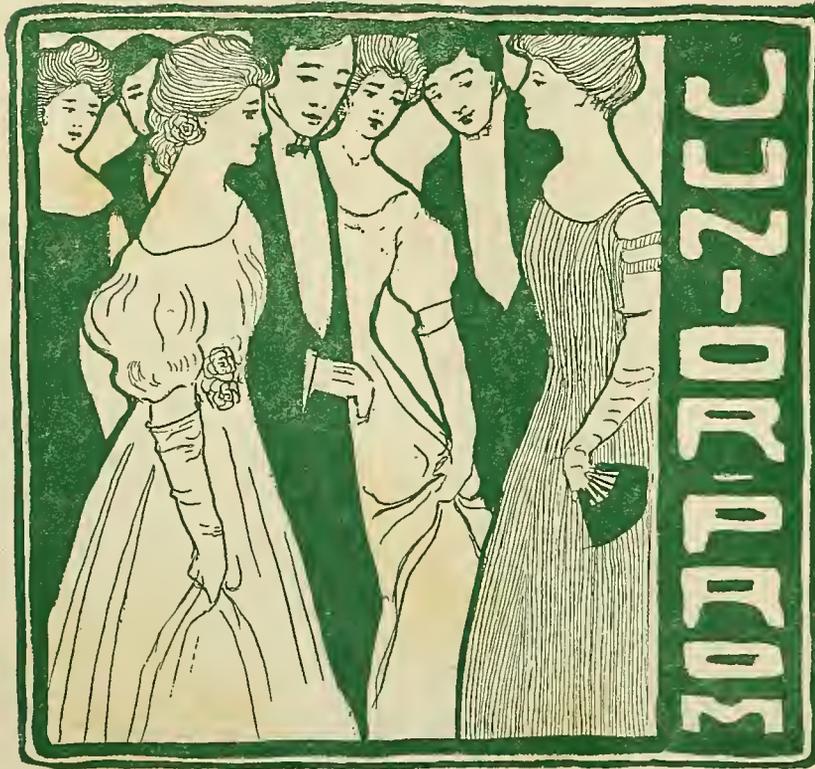

CHAPTER X.

"But do your lofty-minded children never unbend or relax from their high and arduous pursuit of learning?" said Father Time.

"Aye," answered Tulane; "their college days are lighted^d with the sunlight of good cheer, and they thoroughly believe that

"It's always fair weather
When good fellows get together
With a stein on the table
And a good song ringing clear."

THE DORMITORY.

"Ah! it doesn't look anything like I thought it would," said one of a crowd of conscious-looking Freshmen as they came out of Newcomb College on October 1, 1917, and crossed the street to the Josephine Louise House. With an assumed air of bravery, one of them rang the bell and asked the maid if they might see the "lady in charge." They were told to have seats, and as the green room looked inviting, it was there that the Matron found them. When they saw her, they felt more at home, for she was a sweet-looking old soul.

"Although it is strictly against the rules of the Dormitory," she said, "to pry into the affairs of others, you girls have arrived here in such good time that you deserve some reward, so I am going to take you over the rooms and tell you many interesting things about Dormitory life in years gone by, for I have been here fourteen years. The year after I graduated (1907) I could not bear to tear myself away from Newcomb and the dear J. L. H., so I spent my time here and in Pontotoc. The next year Dr. Dixon engaged me as Matron, Miss Shields having left and gone to China to visit her nephew. Miss Tew went with her to add Chinese to her long list of languages. We will find the awards that Fate has dealt out to my old schoolmates preserved in the records of the J. L. H."

She then proceeded to read to them out of it:

"Lucille Lewis.—Married.
Fannie, Trix, Katherine.—Prima donnas of the operatic stage.
Edna, Sara.—Home, awaiting Prince Charming.
Bessie Connoly.—Still the Hon. B. Connoly.
Lily Dupré.—Canada.
The Durnes.—Studying in Germany.
Clara Joffrion.—Hasn't changed her Dormitory name.
The Two Marys.—Married naval officers.
Carrie, Marie.—Vaudeville artists.
Florence.—New Orleans.
Blanche, Bertha, Viola, Elise.—Touring Europe.
Marguerite.—Memphis.
Naomi.—Natchez.
Adèle Blum.—Still in single blessedness with her room-mate, Roy.
Hattie.—Married that West Pointer.
Sue and Flossie.—Living in Crowley.
Sara Crust.—Returned to New York.
Edna.—A poetess.
Bess.—Married somebody. Grass Widow.
The Drakes.—Still like two barnyard fowls.
Blanche, Reine.—At home.
Rosalie Laub.—Never able to leave dear Newcomb.'

"Now, girls, that is all. The spirits of those girls who were here during that most of years, old '07, still haunt the old J. L."

TO PERRINE.

You 're our queen, Perrine!
From your hair of golden sheen
To your little boots, I ween,
The sweetest mascot ever seen
Is you, Perrine!

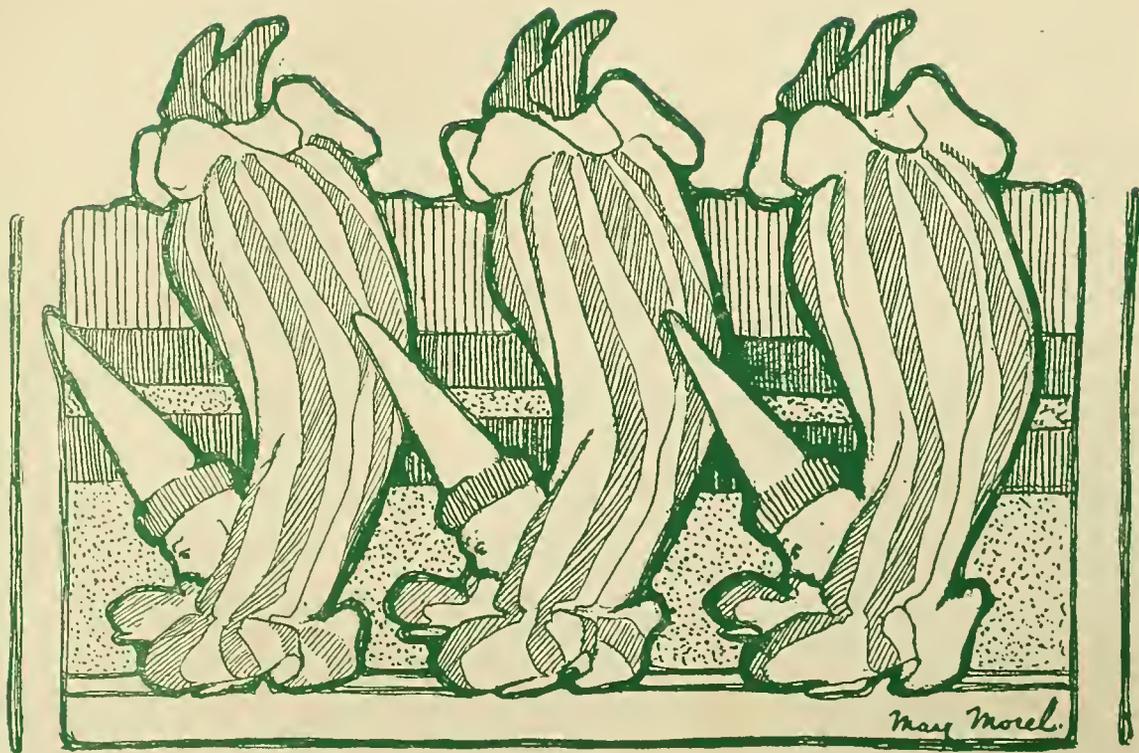

Breathless, hasty, yearning, we,
Seniors in '08 to be,
Still have time to worship thee,
Queen Perrine!
You 're the sweetest ever was,
And we love you just because
You 're our queen, Perrine!

THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

CHAPTER XI.

"A little of many good things, Father Time," said Tulane, fluttering the following pages, "grave or gay, to suit the passing humor."

And Father Time smiled as he read:

MISCELLANEOUS —

DUTIES OF THE OFFICIALS.

PRESIDENT.

The following are the most important duties of the President of the University, who is directed in their performance by Dr. Richard K. Bluff:

- (a) To talk on every possible occasion and even when there is no occasion.
- (b) To study up and encourage the latest London fashions by personal example for the benefit of the students.
- (c) To wear high heels and cultivate his instep.
- (d) To have always on hand and to hand out hard-luck tales.
- (e) To announce an annual deficit.
- (f) To attend Chapel.
- (g) To smoke as many of other people's cigars as he can get.
- (h) To tell us about that Gymnasium.
- (i) To build Faculty houses and other air-castles.
- (j—x, y, z) To talk.

THE SECRETARY.

- (a) To remember that he runs the University.

(b) To remember that the success of the University depends upon him.

- (c) Not to let the President annoy him.
- (d) To separate students from their money.
- (e) To flirt with the stenographer.
- (f) To keep the members of the Faculty awake when Billy Brown is speaking at a Faculty meeting.

THE FRENCH PROFESSOR.

- (a) To impress upon students that "la langue française est la plus belle langue du monde."
- (b) To impress upon students that "la belle Paris est la plus belle ville du monde."
- (c) To impress upon students that "la belle France est le plus beau pays du monde."
- (d) To prove that Napoleon was a Frenchman by birth, not a Corsican.

OUR CLASS OF 1909.

OUR PRESIDENT

Now if you don't bring any dues to-day,
Be sure to remember to-~~mor~~row to pay
For we really must have 'em ready, you know
So we wish to borrow
So you'll know our whole show.

OUR CAPTAIN

Ah! Here comes a "high ball"
Holla! Holla!
Now throw it up hard and pitch it to me.

They say I am a Bromide
Though that I'll never be Top gun I'll here decide
To fulfill our law too.

OUR TREASURER

When there's on my face an anxious look,
And both my arms are folded tight,
You know it's time to show my book
So sign your name upon - or fight.

OUR ORATOR

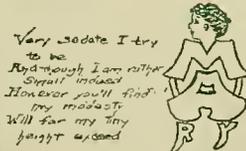

OUR TEASE

Well, puz, my love, don't be so bad,
For all must know you're fine as silk,
But if you cry
with eyes so sad, you'll make me weep over this
'split milk'

OUR SPEAKER

I must speak or I shall die
Which shall it be 'Up my!
Oh my!
Please talk to me right quick and say
All that you can, and just, long may

OUR MODEL

Very sadate I try to be Ryd-though I am rather Small indeed
Honorar you'll find my modesty
Will for my tiny finger is sad

My head is just about to crack
But it will never do to papa...
For I must write of Green and Black
And tell the starts of dag

OUR REPORTER

OUR POET

Listen to my 'screching

OUR VICE-PRESIDENT

I am always optimistic
And I'll fill bar place with cheer
If our splendid leader is sick
Which I hope will ne'er occur

OUR SECRETARY

Never do I have a root,
For the Sophomores
you know Wish from me the very best
Which my fertile brain can offer

I too am 'Black and Green',
So I'll just bow
With modest mien
If you'll allow...

THE SCHEDULE.

(From a Freshman's Standpoint.)

I've stood before this schedule
Almost the whole day long,
And I'm sure I can't find out at all
In what classes I belong.

At nine o'clock I see there's marked
French, History, and Phys.,
Astronomy, Psychology.
(I don't know what that is.)

At ten comes Chemistry and Math.,
German, and Spanish too,
And then Biology and Eng.
(I don't know what to do.)

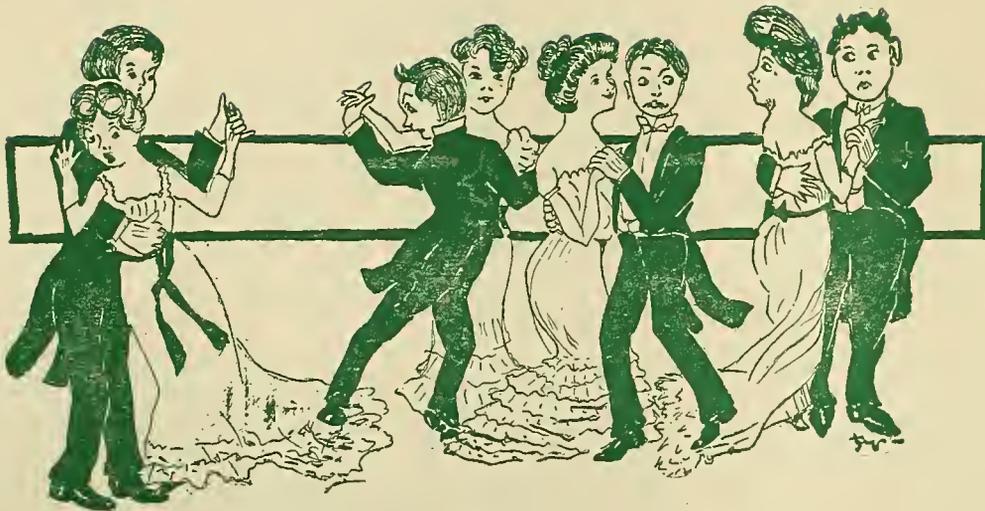

Eleven is the next thing there,
And all those things I've said
Are jumbled round and round again.
(I wish that I were dead.)

At twelve there's nothing marked at all;
I guess that's time to eat
(But half an hour's mighty short
For soup and bread and meat.)

From half-past twelve till half-past one
There's Physics, Math., and Art,
There's History and German.
(I'll learn it off by heart.)

And then at half-past one I see
There's English, French, and Gym.
(I wonder who fixed out this thing—
I don't think much of him.)

I guess I'll copy all these down,
And then I'll take the train;
If I stayed any longer here,
I am sure I'd go insane.

A PATHETIC DITTY.

Sing a song of six pence,
B-y-r full of rye;
Four and twenty serpents
Dance before his eye.
When his eyes are opened
And the snakes begin to crawl,
He will make a Cherry Bounce
And a mighty big High Ball.

Consult Dr. Aldrich about the competition between Beyers and Cellars.

THE MORMON CLUB.

CONSISTING OF PROSPECTIVE POLYGAMISTS.

The Club intends to found a colony for those of their faith in Haremland.

"Behaw! We dont want no Gymnasium!"

No, Freddie dear, my paucity of flesh cannot be ascribed to overstudy. Allow me to serve as a warning to you never seek your noonday nourishment in Refectory pies and sandwiches.

Ah no! "Us never forgets."

CALIFORNIA WHIRLWIND MEETS KID CALDWELL.

EXCITING BOUT FROM START TO FINISH.—THE "KID" FINALLY LANDS ON BATTLEING BARNETT'S BEARD, WHICH SHOCK HE IS UNABLE TO BEAR AND TAKES THE COUNT IN THE FIFTH.

Time-keeper: Minnie Belle.

Referee: Dr. Lehrmann.

Seconds for "Kid" Caldwell: William, better known as "Sleepy" Brown, and Pete Kahle, the noted giant-trainer.

THE FIGHT BY ROUNDS.

First Round.—After the shake, "Kid" Caldwell took a vigorous, aggressive, driving-right-and-left jab at the California boy's eye-lashes. Although this attack was very clever, Battling Barnett seemed able to take care of himself, and managed to protect his lovely lashes by frequently striking the "Kid" on the finger-nails. The attack and clever defense was kept up vigorously till Miss Belle rang herself.

Second Round.—At the gong for the second round the "Kid" seemed fresh and still aggressive, but during the first, somehow a button on his trunks had become unbuttoned, which the California boy noticed with a blush. It was during this round that several of the audience were ejected by Miss Belle for allowing their feelings to get the better of them, as shouts of "Knock his block off, Red!" "Soak that can of soup in the kisser, 'Kid'!" and so on, were heard.

Third Round.—In the third round both fighters seemed tired, but still determined. "Kid" Caldwell was still aggressive, but more cautious. He managed to land a left hook on Battling Barnett's jaw, which sent him to the floor. The crowd became wildly excited as Dr. Lehrmann, with great courage, gave the count. He got as far as "seven," when the California boy was heard to say: "Oh! Oh my! Oh dear! How unfortunate!" He managed to regain his feet, and it was noticed that tears of mortification were trickling down his face. The gong sounded, and both fighters ran to their corners.

Fourth Round.—The fighters still went at each other with determination, and as it was noticed that they began to use their finger-nails, the onlookers knew that a knock-out was inevitable. It was during this round that Dr. Beyer acted with great boisterousness, and, swinging a bottle of some kind of liquid with a strong odor above his head, shouted loudly: "Thish ish great! Shwat 'im in hish noodle, whishkers!" and other unintelligible sentences, as he went off into peaceful slumbers. The round was finished after several severe taps had been administered on both sides.

Fifth Round.—"Kid" Caldwell rushed from his corner with manly vigor, and, after several feints, landed the final punch. A hollow sound was heard, and the California whirlwind dropped to the mat. He was afterwards heard to say that he regretted that he could not compute the exact acceleration of the blow that struck him, but he judged that it was about 50 millimeters per second.

The winner got one dollar and ninety-eight cents and the loser a large-sized juicy lemon.

FAREWELL TO DEILER.

Farewell, O faithful servant true!
Farewell, dear friend of ours.
May Fortune spread her blessings on Thee till thy latest hours.
Thy faithful work here at Tulane
Is known and felt by all,
And every heart will miss you when
We meet again next fall.
Two-score and five long years you 've spent
In training youths to be Prepared to meet life's serious tasks,
Its duties great to see;
And now the hour is drawing near
When from us thou must part;
But though not here, still year by year
Thou art present in each heart.

RECIPE FOR A CLASS POEM.

(By an Experienced Cook.)

To a much-chewed pencil, a pound of paper, a full waste-paper basket, and an empty head, add a few extracted strands of hair (fast turning gray). Scatter freely some wits and sprinkle well with classical allusions. Cook in the hot air of the gas meter, adding every now and then a pinch of heated terms. Flavor well with whisky, so that there may be an abundance of class spirit. Stir vigorously, so that the metaphors may be sufficiently mixed. Cool it in a frozen teardrop shed the night before a Chemistry exam.

This is a very simple recipe, and requires but a little spontaneous effort. It is recommended to dyspeptics, since it is easily digested, being of a very light weight.

DREAMING.

(A Favorite Occupation of Freshmen.)

He went to class quite regular;
He answered questions, too,
And everything that others said
He said he also knew.
He dreamed about those blazing As,
And Bs he fairly scorned,
For mama's boy should have report
Which As alone adorned.

Into examin.-room he went;
He wrote there steady, long
(But hot air never passed for sense),
And "nothing had he wrong."
Oh papa's pet! Oh mama's dear!
Oh, did he ever see
That grand report—not Excellent,
Though one continuous E?

T.

What are 1907s made of?
As and Bs,
And never Cs;
That 's what 1907s are made of.

YOU ARE OLD, FATHER SENIOR.

"You are old, Father Senior," the Freshman remarked,
"And your ears are like sails to the wind,
And your brow is hedabbled with mustard and ink.
Pray, what have you hidden behind?"

"My ears are thus cocked, Youth," the kind Senior replied,
"To hear every donkey that brays,
And the brains bubble up 'neath the mustard and ink,
Which I 'll wear to the end of my days."

"You are old, Father Senior," the Freshman observed,
"And your sight is exceedingly dim,
Yet you say you can see what is non est to me,
Our new magnificent Gym.

"When you have long pondered," the old man replied,
"On Dixon and Hegel and Kant,
You can see what you please on the earth or the seas,
And no one dare tell you, you shan't."

"You are old, Father Senior," the Freshman averred,
"And your trousers are flappy and wide,
But the ivy and mosses are circling your legs;
You never could kick if you tried.

"With patience and kindness," the Senior now swore
"I have given you lie after lie.
You shall know I can kick, so be off with yourself,
Or over the wind-mill you fly."

Enter, little Freshman,
For your four-years fight.
If you but knew
What you had to go through,
Would you do it?
Well, you might.

EPITAPH TO A SENIOR.

Beneath the mournful willow, sad and drear,
A fair young Newcomb Senior dead doth lie;
Essays and comps. did early bring her here.
Of overwork and worry did she die.
"Her name was writ in H₂O," they sigh,
Phosphates, nitrates, this maiden is again.
But cheer up, girls, she smiles down from on high.
She had a rush of ideas to the brain;
Alas! her feeble mind, it could not stand the strain.

HOROSCOPE OF G. E. B.

G. E. B. was born on April 1st, under the sign of Aquarius, the moon being full at the time. Persons born under these two opposing influences are generally more influenced by the condition of the moon than by the weak spirit of Aquarius. These two influences, however, are not so much opposed to each other as it would seem at first sight. For, as Aquarius is a watery planet, persons born under his influence are generally soaked, and the victims of Aquarius and the full moon in conjunction often find them a pretty tight combination. As a sign of a man's habits, Aquarius fits Prof. Beyer about as well as Prof. Deiler's pants would fit "Pammy" Caldwell.

At the time of Prof. Beyer's arrival on this sphere the Dipper had turned bottom up, and Scorpio, the snake, and her brood were greeting Jupiter, who was engaged in drinking the health of every planet in the heavens as fast as he could think of them; Mars was valiantly slaying insects and reptiles, and Venus was being bitten by three different kinds of mosquitoes, since discovered by Prof. Beyer to be the species known respectively as "Pipedremia Beyeri," "Bugbolia Beyeri," and "Fuziazhelia Beyeri."

THE FACULTY BOOZE CLUB.

I.

"Bring me a cup of old Falernian wine!"
Cries Jimmy Dillard, with a voice divine;
"Or a Lacanian maid with golden locks, Clad in a coat of mail, with sportive socks."
"I'll take a keg of dark-brown Munich beer,"
Says Hanno Deiler, accompanied with a cheer.
For Alcée Fortier, who drinks Bordeaux champagne,
He drinks a glass and fills it up again.

II.

"A cocktail and a Scotch highball 'll do for me,"
Says Beyer, "for I've just got o'er my spree";
And Lehrman drinks a flash of Red Toy rye
That 'll move him from the earth beyond the sky;
And Bobby Shay—he doesn't drink a thing;
That's why he is so quite an old earthling;
But Edwin Boon—he beats the whole d—m jam—
He fills his schooner and drinks it down again.

Charley had two little cubes
He often took to College
And when he'd find
Some Freshmen Rubes
He'd teach Them

NEWCOMB SONG.

(Honorable Mention.)

Tune: "There 's a Tavern in the Town."

I.

There 's a College in the town, in the town,
Where winsome maidens sit them down, sit them down,
To quaff the springs of universal lore,
And rob Dame Wisdom of her store.

CHORUS.

Erudition quite appalling,
In an atmosphere enthralling,
And a Faculty the best that can be, can be,
Make the prejudiced acknowledge
That our dear old Newcomb College
Is the flower of the University.

II.

Within these walls our minds are fed, minds are fed,
Our hearts to higher aims are led, hearts are led,
And work and play in a gladsome vein unite,
Each wayward spirit to invite.

CHORUS.

Oh, when my life is ebbing slow, ebbing slow,
May some dear class-mate, bending low, bending low,
Upon my breast pin the cherished Bronze and Blue,
To show I belonged to Newcomb, too.

CHORUS.

MYRA FONT, 1902.

THE STEAM ENGINE AND OTHER HEAT MOTORS.

BY HERR WILLIAM HORSE-POWER CREIGHTON.

Professor Creighton having asked the Seniors for candid criticisms of his great work, the Class hereby respectfully submit their honest opinion:

Literary circles were thrown into hyperbolas recently by the advent of a very cute little red-book, which will afford bunches of pleasure and hunks of enjoyment, not only to the present Senior Class, but also to the succeeding classes which withstand the strength of materials.

The book was written by the author, who, fortunately, was born on his birthday; printed by the printer with a printing machine, and bought by the students as a cure for insomnia, and read only by those who are compelled to do so.

The book shows the writer in his happiest vein—how gloomy he must have been!—and abounds in many soft-soapy terms and glittering generalities, showing the great versatility of the writer. It is to be regretted, however, that the reader is many times made "to climb a hill of sand," and his mind often lapses into Dutch dreams of sauerkraut and Limburger cheese, but this forms one of the few real enjoyments for the reader.

The writer shows throughout an enviable flow of words, as unbroken as an egg dropped on the sidewalk. His style is as graceful as the walk of a hippopotamus, and his expression is equal to the bleat of a dying calf. Otherwise, it is all right. His definitions are as clear as mud and his analogies are as perceptible to the reader as a peanut is to a blind man. In other words, he writes extensively and evolves nothing. In one instance shows himself to be as familiar with society as Alice Fortier is with pretzels. He compares the vibration of molecules in liquids to the graceful dancing of the Virginia reel.

The writer was aided in his researches by such eminent engineers as Dr. Ernestine Pragst, Dr. Annie Grehan, and Maj. François Murphy, all alleged to have been trained at Tulane University.

The book as a whole possesses merit, however; but the writer should be more careful of thought, spelling, wording, paragraphing, and punctuation. Otherwise, as has been said previously, the book has merit.

The publishers, unfortunately, forgot to dedicate it to all those who are foolish enough to read it, such a dedication, doubtless, being intended.

“AS YOU LIKE IT.”

FROM THE CLASS-ROOM.

QUESTION: What is “Gumbo”?

ANSWER: A spoil “Jambalaya.”

Prof. Fortier says his motto is “Tne' l'ane.”

ALDRICH: “Do you believe in taxing breweries?”

MATTHEWS: “I do, to their utmost capacity.”

PROF. DILLARD: “Don't you think it 's about time to turn that page, Mr. Wyly? You 've rendered the first five lines on the next page already.”

DUNCAN: “Gee! I wish the President would invent some kind of simplified mathematics.”

LOST, STRAYED, OR STOLEN.—A pony, branded “Seneca” on off side. Finder please return to Phelps-Zeck stables and receive reward.

DR. CALDWELL: “What is this, Mr. Spencer?”

SPENCER: “I don't know, sir. I've never seen anything like it before.”

DR. CALDWELL: “It 's soap.”

MARY-JANE

EMILIAN WOOD

A LONG-DISTANCE CALL.

EMILY VAN DORN MILLER.

A bent old man, whose sinister face was half hid beneath a ragged slouch hat, and whose clothes bespoke utter penury, was making his way toward the rear entrance of a prosperous-looking, well-kept farm-house. The house was set low near the ground, and through the wide open shutters of the library windows one could easily look into the comfortable room. On a leather couch near a window lay an elderly woman with a sweet, patient face, evidently an invalid. At the center-table a young fair girl sat, reading by the light from a shaded lamp at her side. The scene was a calm and happy one, and naught was to be heard save the girl's clear monotone and the muffled tread of the old tramp as he crept past the window and looked stealthily in. There could be little doubt as to the prosperity of the inmates of the house—the furnishings and appointments of the room, the size of the farm-house, and the extensive garden and orchards, all gave an air of modest wealth.

Suddenly the girl was interrupted in her reading by a timid knock on the back door. She and her mother looked at each other in quick surprise, then—the knock was heard again, a little louder, more defiant. The girl paled a little. Callers at nine at night were unusual on their lonely Illinois farm; but her mother's voice was reassuring.

"Helen," said Mrs. Carter, "you had better see who is there. Perhaps a belated automobile has broken down near by, and someone is in need of assistance."

Helen went obediently to the door at the end of the passage and opened it a tiny crack. The sight of a poor old man set all her fears at rest, and she opened the door wide.

"Can I do something for you?" But the old man spoke so low the girl had to lean to catch his answer.

"Only a bite of bread to keep an old man from starvation," the tramp murmured.

"Certainly," said Helen; "and won't you come into the kitchen and eat it?" And the man's reply was to walk straight into the passage with more alacrity than he had hitherto displayed. He had pushed back his hat and straightened himself up, and the girl saw by the light which fell along the passage that his face was not old, though dissipation had early set its stamp upon his evil features. Well, it was too late to turn him out now, though Helen would have preferred to have him eat on the steps, and she was about to lead him into the kitchen when she saw him turn suddenly and make a beckoning sweep with one arm toward the orchard. Peering quickly out, she discovered by the uncertain light of the harvest moon the indistinct figures of two men approaching quickly from the shadow. The heart of the girl grew cold within her.

In the town of Maynesville, fifteen miles from the Carter farm, "Waverley," Helen's brother Will was studying law, with a fond hope of being some day a shining light at the bar. He was a youth of intellectual ability and studious inclination, so that society had few charms for him, and early and late he was to be found at his desk, intent on the perusal of dry legal volumes. But to-night his mind was wandering, and his thoughts were with his mother and sister on their lonely farm. He was wishing there were no such day as Friday, so that he would have to wait only till to-morrow night to see them. He resolved to have a telephone put into the farm-house and connected with his office. The cost would be as nothing compared with the peace of mind and pleasure he would gain from such an arrangement. In the midst of these reflections his own telephone rang at his desk; not the usual metallic ring, but a continuous tinkling, as telephones sometimes ring when the wires are crossed. He put the receiver to his ear, and at first could hear no response to his impatient "Well," but in a moment he heard melancholy, far-off murmurings unintelligible to his straining ear. He hung up the receiver, but the ringing still went on, so he took it down again, and this time the murmurings had shaped themselves into words: "Go—go—go," they kept saying, in a voice at once sad and imperative; "Go—go to your mother and sister!" He did not wait for more, but dashed out into the street, hatless and terrified. He rushed into the garage at the corner and called in a voice that would brook no refusal: "A racing machine and two armed men, quick!" In two minutes he was in the machine and the chauffeur was taking him down Main Street toward the South Road. They picked up two burly policemen on their course down the thoroughfare, and then as soon as they had reached the outskirts of the town the greatest speed limit was put on, and they were racing like mad in the open country. Neither the chauffeur nor the policemen knew where they were going nor why; they had not stopped to question that imperative voice and those flashing eyes, and if they had, they would have learned precious little from Carter. He began to have some misgivings now about this sudden action. He called himself a fool for his wild haste and his nameless fear, but the fear remained. He called himself weak to let his idle thoughts thus get the mastery over him, and he tried to think the murmuring voice was but the product of a diseased imagination, but its mysterious tones still haunted him, and he shivered at the remembrance of it. These thoughts had passed through his mind in the briefest space, and there shone the lights from "Waverley." With a vague foreboding and almost uncontrollable haste, he touched the chauffeur upon the shoulder, and, pointing ahead, uttered the one word, "There!" the first to break the complete silence of the four men since they left Maynesville.

The automobile drew up with a snort and a jerk, and all four men jumped out at the same instant. Will, of course, was in the lead. He paused the briefest moment at the front steps, where all was dark, but in that moment he reasoned, and wisely, that were his fears without foundation, it would be unwise to startle his little sister and his delicate mother. He would go around by the library, and see if all were well. Still running, as he turned the corner of the right wing he ran full tilt into a man, who seemed as anxious to get away from the house as he was to enter it. His four years' hard work on the gridiron here stood him in good stead. In a second the man's arms were pinioned to his sides and in the next he was in the hands of a redoubtable officer of the law. His collision and sudden arrest had deprived him of all power of speech, but now his words came forth in an incoherent torrent.

"You 're makin' a mistake, mister; I 'm er innocent man as is tryin' to save his life. There 's a man in that house with smallpox."

"What!" yelled Carter, but did not wait for a reply. He raced around the wing, and was just in time to see the back of a man who was fast disappearing in the direction of the orchards. He had no thought of pursuit; he was in the utmost dread of what he had just heard, and, the second policeman at his heels, he entered the open door, and followed the sound of voices to the dining-room. The rejuvenated tramp stood at the sideboard, his arm upon a basket filled with gleaming silver. Across the table five paces away stood Helen Carter, her cheeks blanched, her eyes brilliant. In her hand she held a tiny pearl-handled revolver—heretofore a pretty toy—and the tramp was looking grimly at its muzzle. The girl was terribly in earnest, but when her brother appeared in the doorway a sudden revulsion of feeling came on—she became nerveless, and her hand fell to her side. The tramp turned and was again covered with a revolver, this time a big black one, behind which loomed the formidable features of the policeman.

Will had crossed the room and clasped his little sister in his arms. She wept from sheer relief.

"But, Helen, the smallpox! Who has it, and what does all this mean?" and he indicated the thief, who was making a hasty and somewhat undignified exit, assisted by the policeman.

"It was not true. I invented it in desperation," answered Helen. "The others believed it, but this one did not. Was it wrong of me, brother?"

"My dear, brave little sister," murmured Will, and they went joyfully into the library to the mother. They found that she had swooned from fright, but by their loving efforts she soon revived, and the three rejoiced together over their deliverance and the courage of the little sister. They soon came to the decision that there would never again be a separation of the three, and they discussed their happy plans far into the night. But, strange to relate, in their joy at his arrival, Mrs. Carter and Helen never thought to ask Will why he came, nor did he think to tell them.

Matchless Mollie, the fascinating Ficklen.

Condensed Caldwell, stern sire of the corps de ballet.

Dauntless Dixon, the Distracted Author.

SCENE.—Green-room of the Psycho-Theosophic Transcendental Theatre. Time: 7:45 P. M.

Enter Dauntless Dixon, right.

[He wears evening dress and a worried expression, and flourishes a roll of manuscript.]

DAUNTLESS DIXON: The hour approaches! My subconscious mind has subacutely informed my esoteric ego that this is the moment of destiny. Here, here [striking his manuscript] I have poured out the wondrous wealth of my world-wide wisdom! If they but do justice to it—

[Loud noise of bodies falling outside, with cries of "Help! Help!" "Himmel! Donnerwetter!"]

DAUNTLESS DIXON: Heavens! What has happened?
[Bumptious Bruff rolls in head over heels, left. Dauntless Dixon assists him to rise.]

DAUNTLESS DIXON: Are you hurt?

BUMPTIOUS BRUFF: Hurt? Well, I should think so! You'd be hurt, I suppose, if you had the whole corps de ballet on top of you! My head, so all-important to mankind, is actually loose on my shoulders! My limbs are dislocated!

At the top of the steps, with my arms full of costumes and stage properties, I paused. Germania, the corps de ballet, just behind me, paused not, but bumped into me, and we rolled down together.

DAUNTLESS DIXON: What! The corps de ballet, my star, lying at the foot of the stairs? Oh, woe! My play!

BUMPTIOUS BRUFF. [Still feeling his arms and legs.] Nothing broken, I believe. Well now, that is fortunate; for if I were laid up, I'd like to know who would run this old Psycho-Theosophic Transcendental shebang, not to mention Tulane University. Bruffy, my boy, we are more than modest—we rival the violet in shyness—but we know our worth and that never, never could our place be filled. Aha! We are the only, only—

[Retires up center, humming "I'm a Yankee Doodle Dandy."]

[She carries shield and spear and Bologna sausage.]

DAUNTLESS DIXON: 'There, there, brace up, Germania, like a good girl. You feel all right now, don't you?

GERMANIA: [Weeping noisily.] Nein! Nein! Boo-hoo! I haf my corn on the little tou und my Bologna both gesmashed.

DAUNTLESS DIXON: Well, well, you'll be all right soon. Bumptious didn't mean to make you fall. [Turning, he catches sight of Bumptious advancing down center.] Did you, Bumpy, old boy?

GERMANIA: [Turning on Bumptious Bruff.] Ach! You are there, wooden face? Now vill I you how to trip up and make fall the poor young ladies show!

[Rushes at Bumptious Bruff, and, seizing him by the hair, begins to belabor him.]

BUMPTIOUS BRUFF: Help! Help! Mayor Behrman! John Dymond! Help!

DAUNTLESS DIXON: I'll call the Fire Department, so it can put her out.

SKELETON SHARP, ATTENUATED IVY: [Together.] We will save him! We come, we see—

GERMANIA: And you fly!

[Desisting from chastising Bumptious, she blows violently upon them, and Skeleton Sharp floats off into the wings, right.]

ATTENUATED IVY: [Into wings, left.] So now are the warriors gone! So, my Bruffy—

Caldwell enters, center, and confronts her.

CONDENSED CALDWELL: How now, corps de ballet? Have you forgotten my injunctions? How can you perform the waldance of the Valkyrie if you disarrange your dress and get so out of breath? Here, [picking up the sausage,] take your Bologna and cool off.

GERMANIA: [Accepts the sausage, then takes a large bite, and sticks the remainder in her girdle.] Vell, vell, next time vill our Bruffy not so slow-footed be.

DAUNTLESS DIXON: Where can the rest of the company be? I have a few words to say to them before the performance—the first presentation of my immortal work.

CONDENSED CALDWELL: Yes, the play is all very well, but I scarcely think my part is worthy of my genius. In the scene with La Belle Fortier, where I celebrate with her our triumphs over Matchless Mollie, I think my dance should be more dignified—something in the nature of a priestly function—a rite—a ceremonial—

[Music outside, "The Marseillaise," transposed to rag-time. La Belle Fortier enters and pirouettes down the center. She wears a ballet costume.]

LA BELLE FORTIER: [Singing as she dances.]

I am la belle France,
La jolie, jolie France,
And I can dance a cake-walk or a jig.
You may travel east or west,
And you 'll find that I 'm the best;
No country is so famous or so big.

DAUNTLESS DIXON: Bravo! Now, the neoplastic pose—both of you, please.

[La Belle Fortier poises on one toe, center. Condensed Caldwell falls into a paralytic attitude, right.]

DAUNTLESS DIXON: That is a tableaux to inspire the noblest emotions in the human soul.

GERMANIA: [Jumping up, knocking over her chair, and seizing her shield and spear.] I, too, must in that inspiring of the emotions tableau he!

[Strikes an imposing attitude, with uplifted spear and shield.]

DAUNTLESS DIXON: For heaven's sake, the cash!

[Runs off, right.]

Enter Matchless Mollie and Beau Brummel Craighead.

[Mollie wears a magnificent trained gown of peacock blue listerine. She carries four large bouquets, and is scrutinizing the large cards attached to each. Beau Brummel wears the latest London creation of garnet and gold plaid, and carries three brilliant cravats in his hand, tearing his hair as he contemplates them.]

MATCHLESS MOLLIE: How stupid! I particularly told Virgin that the card to be attached to these pink orchids must have on it the words, "With undying adoration and adoring admiration. From His Grace the Duke of Reubenhays." I thought that out myself, and it would have looked so well. Now he has left out "undying" and "adoring," and put "Mister" instead of "Duke"! As long as I pay for the bouquets, I might as well have them all from titled adorers. Beau Brummel, that is the second time you have trod on my train! What is distracting you so?

BEAU BRUMMEL CRAIGHEAD: Dixon, I don't want to spoil your play, but I cannot and will not go on until someone tells me which cravat goes best with this suit. The blue plaid suits my fair complexion, but the yellow one matches my tawny eyes. For an hour I have stood before the mirror, trying to decide—

LA BELLE FORTIER: All are too loud. The true French taste, which is always perfection, would dictate a cravat of the delicate shade of soupir de crapaud mourant.

GERMANIA: Nein! Mit that suit a yellow feather boa would look fine—nicht wahr?

MATCHLESS MOLLIE: No, no! You are a spiritual youth in the play. A blush pink would be most becoming.

BEAU BRUMMEL CRAIGHEAD: At last! you've saved my reason. No one but a student of Tulane can understand how these questions harass my soul and sap its vitality.

DAUNTLESS DIXON: There, that's all right. I have something to tell you, now that we are all assembled. But where are the Ethereal Twins? Ah! here they come.

MATCHLESS MOLLIE: They are doing their duet in the crack of the door.

GERMANIA: I want to try my solo. You must tell me which I must sing it—falsetto, upsetto, or tinpannetto.

Enter Ethereal Twins, singing gaily.

SKELETON SHARP: [Dancing.]

I am the kindest-hearted man,
The Sophomores declare;
I always wash their faces
And brush their tousled hair.

ATTENUATED IVY:

And I'm the deadly Terror,
From the town of Murder Hole.
Before my eye each Sophomore
Quakes in his little soul.

Together: [Dancing arm in arm.]

Oh, we are, we are, we are, we are
The wonders of the age,
With one so mild and one so wild,
And both so very sage.

SKELETON SHARP:

Then come, my little Sophy,
Here's a bowl of pap for you.

ATTENUATED IVY:

Yes, come, my darling Sophy,
And I'll scare you till you're blue.

Together: [Dancing as before.]

Two marvels such as we, you know,
Will never come again,
With one so mild and one so wild,
The Twins of Old Tulane.

[They form a tableaux, center.

SKELETON SHARP: There! Isn't that sublime? But you people had better hurry up. We've been peeping at the audience, and it's getting very restless.

ATTENUATED IVY: Yes; the queer noises back here have made the people nervous.

DAUNTLESS DIXON: Then let me give my parting advice.

[He stands with his back to the audience, and the others are grouped gracefully before him.

DAUNTLESS DIXON: Ladies and gentlemen,—The opportunity of a lifetime. I have given you a masterpiece. See that you render it truthfully. Lift up your voices loudly and clearly—

GERMANIA: [Bursting out with the battle-cry of the Valkyrie.]

Yi-yi-yi! Yah-yah-yah!
Squee! Whoopee! Wow! Wow!
Wooo-oo-oo!

[Sounds outside of a terrific stampede. Chairs overturned, scampering feet, shrieks of "Murder!" "Fire!" "Police!" Doors banging, etc.]

BUMPTIOUS BRUFF: [Rushing up stage and off, center.]
The audience is escaping! Quick! Quick! Catch 'em!
Catch 'em!

DAUNTLESS DIXON: [Rushing off, left.] Run! Run!
Stop 'em! Head 'em off!

THE TWINS: [Tearing madly after him.] Sic 'em! Sic 'em!

CONDENSED CALDWELL: [Moving with dignity up stage and off, center.] I come! I come!

BEAU BRUMMEL CRAIGHEAD: I 'm a sprinter, and here goes!
[Runs out, center.]

MATCHLESS MOLLIE: [Catching up train.] You can't beat me!
[Exit, center.]

GERMANIA: Und me! [With wild whoop, trots off, center.]

A CHEMICAL ANALYSIS OF NEWCOMB.

(BY AN EXPERT CHEMIST.)

Newcomb (N.) was discovered by H. Sophie Newcomb and that great chemist, Brandt B. Dixon, in the year 1886. Although an important element in the educational world, no one could accuse it of being elementary.

PHYSICAL PROPERTIES.

Color.—Brown and blue.

Taste.—The buildings are exceedingly tasty, and the atoms of which Newcomb is composed (i. e., the Newcomb students) are noted for their good taste in dress.

Solubility.—Newcomb is only slightly solvent.

Weight.—This element is very light-hearted, though no one could accuse it of being light weight.

Newcomb exists in the three states—solid, liquid, and gaseous. As a solid, it forms the basis of a good solid education. (See Catalogue.) It also exists as a liquid, being quickly liquidated when not combined with sufficient Ag. In the gaseous state it is always at a very high temperature, and has all the characteristics of hot air. Newcomb is sublime, often changing immediately from the solid to the gaseous state.

The freezing-point is 23° F. under the pressure of one of Miss Hero's withering glances, and Newcomb boils at 2323° F. when Mrs. Nixon makes one of her scathing remarks.

CHEMICAL PROPERTIES.

Activity.—Exceedingly active. (See Newcomb basketball field after 3 o'clock on any week day.)

Affinity.—The Newcomb atoms have no affinity for Ag., as any class treasurer can testify. It has been rumored, however, by the latest arrival from the field of chemical action that the element Newcomb has developed within the last few years a rapacious affinity for this silvery substance.

Newcomb (N.) has a very great affinity for Tulane (T.).

$N. + T. = T. U.$ (Tulane University).

N. and T. form an entirely unexpected compound, since N. loses all its individual properties and becomes merely Useful to Tulane. Some chemists account for this by the theory that Tulane is Useful to Newcomb. The latter is not plausible. (See page 23.)

N. and T. may be separated easily by the Dixonion method, which gives holidays to Tulane and none to Newcomb.

After the elements N. and T. have been used for four years, they will unite readily by the aid of heat.

Experiment.—When a match was applied, the Tulane flame united with the Newcomb atom. A loud laugh and kissing noise was heard, and a yellow ring resulted from this union.

$N. + T. + \text{heat (match)} = Tu.$ (tu, often spelt two, 2). The above experiment proves N. to be very combustible. Perhaps this is due to the superabundance of hot air. Although Newcomb does not support combustion, Tulane, after it has been used four years, can sometimes support Newcomb. Tulane, on the other hand, is often insupportable. Example: When it has a holiday and Newcomb has not.

On the whole, Newcomb is a most interesting element, since it is very useful to man (and also to woman). It is absolutely essential to student life, for it builds up the tissues of the brain. We often wonder how the world got along before this element was found(ed) in the year 1886.

As Miss Hero says: "Chemistry is a science of the greatest practical value."

EDNA DANZIGER, '07.

“FOR AULD LANG SYNE.”

The man drew his coat-collar about his ears, rammed his hat farther over his eyes, and slipped quickly into a half-open gate. Somewhere a steeple-clock struck one, and farther off an aggressive rooster crowed a hoarse challenge to his kith and kin. Softly the man stepped round the big gray house, and at the back he stopped and listened. Then up the steps to a window, where, with a small bright tool, he quickly removed a pane of glass. Once inside, and the rest was not hard.

* * * * *

The scarf-pin was good and the cuff-buttons, and the ten-dollar bill, tucked snugly away in the fat pocket-book. The sharp glitter of something on a coat caught the man's eye. He glanced nervously at the boy in bed, for the occupation was still new to him; but a soft snore reassured him. He reached for the coat, and held the sparkling thing closer. Only a small angular piece of gold, on which were three Greek letters and a tiny symbol—by far the least valuable thing as yet. But he stopped, and in a flash went back ten years. Then he had worn a pin like the one he held. Then he had been like the boy—young, strong, square. His room, too, he remembered, had been pretty much like the one in which he stood. There was a pennant that reminded him of his foot-ball days, for the opposition had carried it when he won his first laurels. And wasn't it his sister who had sent him a cushion like the one in the corner? There was the picture of a girl—and he remembered another girl. They had been great chums for a long, long time. She had worn his little angular pin for almost a year, and then, because he thought they'd been just chums long enough, she had given it back. She was sorry, she told him, that he had so misunderstood her. A thousand like things swept thro' the man's mind in less time than it takes to tell, and for a moment his face was that of the boy who belonged to the past. The vow of the Greek letters came back to him, and he felt himself grow hot. Reluctantly he loosed his hold on the coat, only to tighten it again. For a moment he stood irresolute. "I can't do it!" he said at last. Lightly he dropped the coat, quickly replaced the trinkets and purse—then turned and looked at the boy. Half unconsciously he muttered a fragment of the vow that belonged to the three Greek letters. Turning, he slipped down the stairs and thro' the window, noiselessly as he had come. Outside he cursed himself for a fool, and disappeared into the mists of a dim, cold morning.

OBITUARY OF JAMBALAYA BOARD....1907....

The Editor-in-Chief, John Gayle Aiken; Nell Bres, & fair young Newcomb Senior; Anne Robertson, a promising Art Student; Clive Kernan, now lost to the Busy world; Silent Stevens, the most eloquent orator-doctor the Medical Department ever lost; and Frank Cannon, the best looking man who ever studied Law; all these, have been touched by the gentle hand of Death; have departed this life in this County, in the 4th year of their college life.

In the various spheres in which they were called to move in life, each acted well his part. Nor should it be omitted, that in those dear meetings, which came so seldom, and lasted so short a time, they were particularly active and successful in organizing their Jambalaya, a book which exerted a powerful influence on the University.....

Blessed are those who die for the good of their fellow-men — Yea, saith the SPIRIT, that they may rest from their labours, and their works follow them not, but do live forever and ever.

'Tis Faith disarms suspicion, and absolves from every clamour-ous charge the "the guiltless tomb."

Nell Bres and Gayle Aiken were calm & collected in view of the approaching end, which they had anticipated for a long time. The last straw to break the health of these Literary Editors was the attempt to reduce a 1300 word story to fit a 400 word page. They were both splendid characters, without a fault.

The tragic end of Anne Robertson is known to all. Returning from a Board Meeting at 11:30 PM

she was mistaken for a Burglar, by one of the family, and fatally wounded.

Clive Kernan died from a cut, the most unkindest cut of all. It was an "expensive" cut, and zinc and copper-plate poison set in, with fatal results. His last words were: "In case of fire, save the Jambalaya!"

Stevens died a natural death caused by exhaustion from over-talking. Towards the close of life he appeared incessantly to be engaged in solemn meditation. Last words were: "Do just as you think best." Cannon died from the shock caused by one ^{let him} Jambalaya Meeting. R. I. P.

THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

CONCLUSION.

"My tale is ended," said Tulane. "You know now how earnestly I have striven, in the past year you have granted to the sons of men, for the sake of my children. Its lessons have been deeply imprinted on their minds, and I hope and believe that I have helped them to advance one step at least along the pathway marked out by their Divine Creator. You have read their story of the year; do not blot it out too quickly, but let the memory of its happiness linger in their young hearts."

Father Time sat gazing out upon the measureless world-dotted firmament, lost in reverie. The silence of the infinite was unbroken around them, save for the wondrous melody of wandering winds, and the glorious sunlight of heaven wrapped the two in its radiance. At last he bestirred himself, and, laying a gentle hand upon THE JAMBALAYA, he spoke:

"You have well won my praises and gratitude, my daughter. The chronicles of the past have no fairer tale than this. You and your children have put my gift to a noble use. If all the years that I have given had been equally well used, the millennium would be nearer to the present. The record of the past is but the shadow of the future, and your value to the children of men will grow with the many years that I shall give you, and the luster of your fame and the honor of your sons and daughters shall extend to the uttermost bounds of the world."

Father Time closed the volume.

FINIS.

JAMBALAYA, boiled or cooked,
Served by pages, also booked,
Now is finished. Come and take
One good swallow for our sake.
Hope you like it; hope you tell
Others of it, so we sell;
Then we 'll thank you from our heart.
Now farewell! All friends must part.

WINCHESTER

RIFLES SHOOT STRAIGHT AND STRONG

The name "Winchester" on a rifle barrel is the hall-mark of accurate and strong shooting. This is due to the excellence of Winchester barrels, the knowledge and experience embodied in their manufacture and the care taken in targeting them. Only good guns ever leave our factory. For results always use Winchester guns for all your shooting and Winchester make of ammunition for all your guns.

The best endowed educational institution of the South

The Medical Department, established in 1845, affiliated with the great Charity Hospital maintained by the State at a cost of $140,000 a year, has been recognized as one of the leading Medical Colleges of the United States. The recent gift of $800,000 to this department by the late A. C. Hutchison will add greatly to its equipment and teaching facilities.

The New Orleans Polyclinic has been recently affiliated with the University, and is now the Post-Graduate Medical Department.

The H. Sophie Newcomb Memorial College, the department of Tulane for women, with a present endowment of $600,000. The recent bequest of $3,000,000 by the late Mrs. Warren Newcomb will make this the best endowed College for Women in the world.

The Law Department, established by the State in 1845, has had many eminent men in its Faculty. Recently reorganized, this department is now one of the greatest law schools of the country.

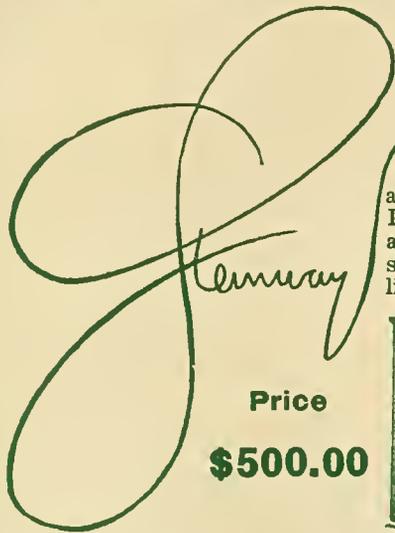

The Academic Colleges, established in 1845 by the State, as a department of the University of Louisiana, was placed on enduring foundation by the gift of Paul Tulane in 1884, amounting to more than $1,000,000. This department comprises the College of Arts and Sciences and the College of Technology, with full courses in Literature, Science, and all branches of Engineering.

The Graduate Department, open to graduates of approved colleges, offers courses leading to the degrees of M. A., M.E., C.E., and Ph.D.

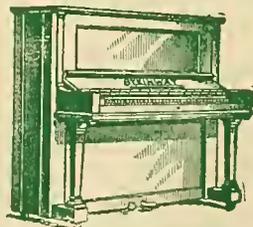

The Tulane University of Louisiana offers to high school graduates more than one hundred free scholarships; to graduates of approved colleges a number of fellowships with $250 each and free tuition.

The Fame of the Steinway

The piano by which all others are measured and judged, is not merely local or national. It is international, universal, world-wide, and is the recognition in the strongest possible manner of a work of art that is in its line unequaled and unrivalled.

Used in private as well as in public concerts by all the principal musical celebrities the world over. Exported to and sold in all art centers of the globe.

A Piano's Proud Position

PIANO

is, with possibly one exception, the oldest established Piano in America. It shows, without any exception, the greatest number of Pianos made and in use. It is universally admitted to have most wonderful power and sweetness of tone. It has been proved to possess remarkable tonal and structural durability, and in its various styles it is Exceptionally Artistic in Appearance thus appealing to the aesthetic taste of the art lover as well as that of the musician.

Such a Piano will come the nearest to giving perfect and lasting satisfaction, therefore it is

A SAFE PIANO TO BUY.

*Send for catalogue and terms.
We take your old Piano or Organ as part payment.*

APOLLO INSIDE PLAYER PIANO

The only one in the world that operates all the keys of the piano, $7\frac{1}{2}$ octaves.

88 Notes

Don't buy one that only plays 65 notes of the piano because the music is not as complete nor as perfect nor as correct as the 88-note player.

See it at our warerooms.
