The University of the South

The University of the South, known as Sewanee, has established as one of its chief objectives a liberal arts college of five hundred students, all of whom shall be qualified for college work. Its ambition is that every student before entrance shall give proof of his capacity and preparation for college work. If Sewanee can realize this goal, it will be the greatest achievement any institution of higher learning in the South has accomplished and the greatest single contribution any institution has made to Southern education.

There are many splendid institutions in the South, many with an overflowing enrollment. There is none, however, which has attained as yet the objective that its student-body throughout be qualified for college work. Such an objective is Sewanee's peculiar opportunity and the chance for its accomplishment is a special and distinct purpose of its existence.

For an institution to be first in the South to claim a student-body of young men proven qualified for college work would have a far-reaching influence upon Southern education and Southern life. It would be an example which would be followed more and more by other colleges and universities and by secondary schools as well, for the greater good of education. It is a right general philosophy that every person should be qualified to do that thing which he has undertaken to do in any walk of life, in any occupation or vocation. To put this into practice in the field of education is the only proper course to pursue, for education is not apart from life. This would be of the utmost importance in the development and training of our people.

Furthermore, an institution of higher learning with a student-body qualified for academic work would go far to lift the intellectual level of the South, to strengthen the South's intellectual and moral vitality, and to provide a finer intellectual and moral leadership. One of the needs of the South, as of the nation, is greater intellectual vigor, the discipline of a more exacting intellectual training. An incentive toward these would come as a result of Sewanee's attaining its first special purpose. Thus Sewanee would serve more effectively both the nation and the South and, because of its attainment, would be of more value to every section of the country.

The universities of the British Isles are established upon the principle that a young man or woman must have the capacity and preparation for college work. The more excellent institutions of our own country are operated on the same plan. This is, in part, the essence of their greatness. There should be similar institutions in the South. Sewanee hopes to be the first. That is her particular opportunity.

The University of the South is, of course, more than a college of liberal arts. It comprises also a Theological School. The goal of the Theological School is to be one of the finest seminaries in America. Under the University's Board of Trustees and on the same domain is the Sewanee Military Academy. The goal of the academy is to be the best preparatory school in the South for boys. The three schools present a program of superior merit and importance.

The University of the South is set in a domain of ten thousand acres on a plateau in the Cumberland Mountains. These acres offer an opportunity without parallel for an extensive and varied program of athletic sports and recreation for all students. Here are unlimited potential facilities for playing fields for games of all sorts, for golf, tennis, riding, hiking, and the like. All this would be in addition to fine intercollegiate athletics which Sewanee does and would maintain.

The development of such a program would be unique. The development of such a program would be a source of greatest happiness to all students at Sewanee and a most constructive and wholesale influence in their lives. As for enrollment, Sewanee could not accommodate the young men who would apply for admission if such a plan were carried to fruition.

And this of the utmost importance: With such a program of physical recreation and sports, Sewanee could be the pioneer in the field of education in the idea of its fulfillment that every man would learn or carry on at college one or two sports which he would continue after college. It is a contradiction of wise educational procedure and common sense that the majority of students take part only in those athletic sports in college in which they never participate after graduation. When to this number is added the multitude of those who play no athletic games at all, one begins to see how much is lost from a happy and helpful college life. Here again Sewanee has a rare and special opportunity.

Looking Down Fraternity Row at Ole Miss

Frosh footballers at Tulane decided they needed a more personal mascot than that afforded by a Green Wave, secured a duckling to fill the role. Named Donald 2d, the feathery one was a popular dormitory pet until he met with disaster, dying at the age of 5 days as result of a fall down a flight and a half of stairs.

HOBBY . . . Dean James W. Norman, University of Florida's College of Education, is rated a "master craftsman" and the magnificent Grandfather Clock is evidence of his avocational skill.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, Bobby Kellogg, Tulane halfback, shook away from these Ole Miss tacklers and ran 23 yards for a touchdown.
