

JUNIOR PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

The Junior Philharmonic Society of New Orleans will present its 273rd performance featuring the talents of 18 dancers, instrumentalists and vocalists — including a third-generation vocal performer — from throughout the New Orleans area who range in age from third grade through graduate student on Sunday at 2 p.m. at Tulane University's Dixon Hall.

Admission is free.

Performing students include:

› Dancers — Maslen L'Esperance, third grade at Waldorf School; Norah Harris, fourth grade at McGehee School; Emma Grace Madison, fourth grade at Lycee Francais; Helena Usey, sixth grade at Hynes Charter School; Sofia Bosch, sixth grade at Patrick Taylor; Vivian Palmer, a freshman at Dominican High School; Ivy Fitzgerald, a sophomore at Benjamin Franklin High School; Rachel Cicero, senior at Ursuline Academy; and Virginia Quinlan, a senior at Dominican High School.

› Instrumentalists — violinist Claire Min, eighth grade, Haynes Academy.

› Pianists — Derek Witzig, seventh grade at Audubon Charter School; Natalia Timotina, a sophomore at Southeastern Louisiana University; and Jacob Veligan, a graduate student at Tulane.

› A trio of instrumentalists — Amanda Lucas, junior at Mandeville High School/NOCCA, on flute; Logan Lambert, junior at Haynes Academy/NOCCA on clarinet; and Nicolette Cash, junior at Benjamin Franklin High School/NOCCA on alto saxophone — also will perform.

› Vocalists — sopranos Lindsey Nicole Reynolds, a senior at NOCCA; as well as NOCCA senior and third-generation performer Emily Sheets, whose mother, NOCCA voice teacher Phyliss Treigle, and deceased grandfather, opera singer Norman Treigle, performed in concerts presented by the Junior Philharmonic Society.

At the end of the concert, seven students who performed during the society's 2015 concerts will be presented special awards. These include:

› Scholarship Award winners Rory Loo and Nicole Lim, violin and viola.

› Irving Carr Award winners Cate Tallant and Maci Burt, dancers.